Mrs. Clark was the daughter of a pioneer Methodist missionary and had been interested in missionary work in this area for many years.

English Professor Publishes Novel

James B. Hall, assistant professor of English, had his first novel published Monday by Random house publishing company in New York.

The novel is "Not by the Door," the story of an Episcopalian clergyman, Howard Marcham. Marcham's conflict between his honest desire to be a worthy representative of his calling and his other natural desires forms the story of the novel.

Hall has had poetry, short stories and criticisms published in a number of magazines. He had also had pieces in anthologies such as "O. Henry Prize Stories" and Martha Foley's "Best American Short Stories."

Hall teaches classes in short story, novel and versification.

Five-Point Program Formed at Meeting

A National Committee on Fraternities in Education has been formed by a group of college educators and community leaders in New York to combat discrimination in fraternity membership. Professor Alfred McClung Lee, chairman of the department of sociology at Brooklyn college, was elected president of the new organization.

A five-point program as a basis for the organization's work was drawn up at the first meeting which includes: keeping informed of developments in fraternity and sorority policies and programs, and undertaking appropriate research and study, including further examinations of the damage to educational objectives and personality development already indicated by preliminary evidence.

Also making information and consultation services available to fraternities, sororities, colleges, student organizations, and the general public; stimulating conferences among alumni, undergraduate fraternity leaders, and college administrators and trustees to promote understanding of the problem and corrective action, campus by campus; and encouraging colleges, national organizations and alumni to recognize the importance of permitting young people to select their own companions, free from outside pressure.
