Greeks Outline Platform Plank

A list of eight points in support of the nominating convention proposed by the Associated Greek Students as the objective of the fifth plank in their platform were listed Wednesday by Bob Pollock, a member of the AGS policy committee. Pollock was one of the four men who suggested the plank.

Designed to answer the question "What will we do if we do away with the open primary?" a full-dress convention patterned after the national political party conventions is proposed. Closest campus example of the proposed plan, according to AGS leaders, was the mock political convention held here two years ago.

The policy committee of AGS would handle all arrangements for the convention, with the aid of AGS representatives.

Representation at the convention would be based upon one delegate for every 10 men in the living organization and one representative for every "fraction of 10 over a number divisible by 10" The figures would be based upon official office of student affairs tabulations.

Delegates would be seated in designated sections, with the remaining space going to other interested students.

Nominations would be made from the floor, with two seconds allowed for each nomination. Each speech would be of a limited length.

A special committee would formulate the platform for presentation to the convention after the nominations. Any AGS member could move for additions or removals from the platform, which would have to be ratified by delegates to the convention.

The AGS suggestions of the nominating convention would replace the current all-campus primary. In their platform, passed Tuesday afternoon, the Greeks urged addition of section VI to article VI of the ASUO constitution.

The proposed addition calls for each party to present a slate of candidates for the general elections, with the candidates to be selected as the party chooses.

AGS proposes to use the nominating convention as its method of choice of candidates.
