U. S. Isolationism Is Myth, Williams Tells Audience

by Gordon Rice Emerald Assistant News Editor

The idea that the United States government has remained aloof from entanglements with other countries during certain periods in its history is more a myth than a fact.

However, American historians have tended to overlook these relations at times and concentrate on domestic problems, William A. Williams, assistant professor of history, told a browsing room audience Wednesday night.

Of Visiting Speaker Washington No Isolationist

M. R. Sponenburgh, assistant professor of art, will speak on 'Egyption Art and Archaeology' under the joint auspices of the of classics at the University of from the rest of the world. Washington Friday and Saturday.

Sponenburgh's lecture is a part of the regular program of visiting ly meant was that he wanted no lecturers under the division of humanities. He will also read a paper, "Liturgical Art From the Reign of Ramess II."
