The McCarthy Plague

We keep receiving literature from various groups around the country, pushing campaigns for various and assorted things and asking our support.

The latest plea to come in over our desk is a letter from a group of students at the University at Ann Arbor, Michigan. And they bring up the rather familiar problem of Senator Joseph McCarthy and his activities in the U.S. senate. The students at Ann Arbor have organized a group known as the Green Feather, taken from the report of a textbook commissioner in Indiana who felt that the story of Robin Hood should be banned from the schools as it fostered communist ideals. An example of this, the commissioner felt, was the practice of Robin Hood of robbing the rich and giving to the poor.

The "Merry Men" of the Ann Arbor Green Feather group urge students and townspeople to organize and write letters to their representatives in the government in an effort to get the Wisconsin senator "to curb his activities."

They remind us that McCarthy has: 1. not been responsible for the conviction of one communist; 2. not suggested one single legislative bill concerning communism; 3. acted as though honest errors, which could be viewed as advantageous to the enemy, were therefore premeditated acts of subversion; 4. by both his activities here, and those of his operatives abroad, greatly damaged American prestige, and 5. in effect, usurped the powers of the judicial by conducting his investigations in a quasi-judicial manner.

With all of which we agree. But, before joining up with any group, to rid America of the plague of McCarthyism, we'd like to present an excellent interpretation of the whole McCarthy problem, written by Robert Frazier, which appeared in the Eugene Registher-Guard editorial columns April 21.

Nothing Personal About It

From Nevada and from Wisconsin come reports of attacks upon Senator Joe McCarthy, and in some otherwise enlightened quarters, these attacks are being hailed as blows for liberty. They should not be so regarded.

In Wisconsin the battle is being fought by the "Joe Must Go" group which seeks to get Joe out of the senate by legal means. In Nevada they are less patient. There the attack is by Hank Greenspun, the Las Vegas editor now under federal indictment for suggesting too broadly that Joe should be eliminated as Huey Long was eliminated.

Both these attacks are probably well-intentioned. But both miss the point. McCarthy is no Huey Long, inspiring the love of the underfed and the undereducated, promising a new world with every man a king. He is no Hitler, with a broad program for national glory. He is just an ambitious, unprincipled, and rather obnoxious political prospector who found where the political treasure was buried.

If McCarthy were to be eliminated today, McCarthyism would carry on. Other prospectors, jealous of Joe's big strike, would mine the same vein, hoping to reap the same rich rewards. McCarthy didn't put the treasurer there. He borrowed an old map and it led him to the old mine.

He discovered what the Kno-Nothings discovered a hundred years ago. He discovered what the Ku Kluxers had left behind. He discovered the political value of suspicion and distrust. He discovered how to use hate. All these discoveries are old. Joe discovered how to apply them to the current situation.

These old treasures he wrapped in a shining gilt blanket of patriotism, the same blanket used by the Know Nothings and the Ku Kluxers, and the same blanket used by Hitler and Cromwell and every other demagogue of every other time.

It is convenient to focus a fight around a personality. It is easier to hate Joe McCarthy than it is to hate shabby ethics. McCarthy knows that. He used the technique when he focused his early crusades around the person of Dean Acheson. He knows you can hate Dean Acheson easier than you can hate intellectualism or soft-headedness or that most loathsome of vices, "wrong-thinking." It does no credit to Joe's enemies if they adopt his techniques.

The answer to McCarthyism is not the elimination of the brilliant and determined prospector. It is the elimination of the feelings he plays upon. Joe McCarthy is merely one character riding across the stage of history. It happened he filled a particular need at a particular time. If Joe goes, the people who embraced him will gather around somebody else.

tional Armed Forces day, an event observed by all Armed Forces units in the nation.

The two groups will assemble at the same time, Saturday at 2:30 p.m.; the Army on the upper drill field behind the ROTC buildings; and the Air Force in its regular location on the intramural track. The color guard and band will group on the intramural track with the Air Force.

Roll will be taken at 2:30 p.m., as in a regular ROTC drill period. Each house on campus has turned in a list of its members who are working on the float parade, and only these cadets will be excused from the drill. They will not have to make the drill up, according to Col. Edwin B. Daily, professor of air science and tactics.

After roll has been taken, the two groups will form into a single marching unit on the lower (frosh) baseball diamond. At 3 p.m. the parade will start; the ROTC units will move up 18th ave. to University st., where they will join the Junior Weekend float parade.

There will be 60 entries in the parade, including the ROTC marching group and 21 University floats by campus living organizations.
