

Duck Tracks

By GORDON RICE
Emerald Sports Editor

The Stanford dressing room was quiet after the Indians' upset victory over Oregon in Portland Saturday night. There was none of the shouting and horseplay that usually goes on after a win. The players dressed quickly and quietly, and except for occasional calls for tape, towels and other equipment, they were almost silent.

Coach Chuck Taylor, in the hall outside the Stanford dressing room, was not as silent, but he didn't seem any happier than the players. He told reporters that his team was lucky to win, and only shook his head when people came by to congratulate him.

Taylor Praises Oregon Line

He praised the Oregon line, and called the Ducks a better all-around ball club than his own Indians, but said that his own ball club was "better on the breaks." Taylor, incidentally, predicted the final score of the game almost exactly. Before the game, he had told newsmen that the Indians would win 21-13, missing the actual score by only three conversions.

It has been some time since we've seen a team miss three straight conversion attempts in a game as Stanford did. After watching two kicks by Bill Tarr and one by Dewey Atkinson going wide, it was obvious why Stanford chose to run the ball for the extra point that beat College of Pacific the weekend before.

ing a long chalk talk and observation of the Oregon-Stanford game movies.

Mobley spent Monday in the infirmary after being kicked over the kidney during the Stanford game.

Freshman Athletes Enroll at Oregon

TERESA WRIGHT says: "Up to 16, my knowledge of acting had been gleaned from seeing movies. When I saw my first professional play, that was it: I only wanted to act. I got into high school plays, wrestled props at Provincetown, understudied, sat for months in producers' reception rooms. One night, sick with a cold, I read for a good role, and got it!"
