

Segregation, Teachers Topic of NAACP Meeting

Southern schools that have been desegregated as a result of the recent Supreme Court decision will not cause a noticeable decrease in the number of Negro teachers employed—this was the general consensus of opinion at a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People meeting Thursday night.

R. D. Clark, assistant dean of the college of liberal arts and moderator of the panel discussing the question emphasized that "one of the early justifications for segregated schools was that the Negro teacher would not be out of a job."

Mark Smith, deputy commissioner of the Fair Employment Practices Commission Division of Labor, stated in his opening panel address that the lack of qualified teachers on a nationwide scale would alone be enough to disprove that theory.

"We Hear... of Friction"
"We hear more about the cases of friction than about the smooth-running situations," he said, "and the appalling need alone would indicate that prejudice and fear will not interfere with meeting that need."

The question of attitudes was brought out by A. C. Hearn, University associate professor of education, who said that young people's extreme viewpoints are easily modified and the trend is toward more Negro participation in everything, including sports and music activities.

Short, Long Range Results
Short and long range results were the keynote of the discussion, and J. V. Berreman, professor of sociology, expressed the opinion that "while many Negro teachers may lose jobs now, the eventual condition will be one of more equality of opportunity."

The general public will follow the lead taken by people in responsible positions, according to Smith, whose job in FEPC includes enforcement of fair practices and public education. Examples cited by Smith included that of the Army, where segregation of Negro and white troops within divisions has recently been broken down, and an overall social trend which includes more Negro participation in areas formerly 'all white.'

One difficulty pointed out by Berreman was that the tendency in most communities was "to cater to the most vocal objectors, especially when initiating a change." Especially when the opposition has access to the press, he continued, is their objection the controlling factor even when they are in the minority.

An optimistic note on the overall Negro-teacher employment situation, explained by Smith, was that the first Negro teacher in Portland was hired in 1945, and there are now more than 30 Negro teachers in that city.

In answer to a question about the treatment of southern Negro children by white teachers there, Smith said that "the blind can't lead the blind... it has to be done on a teacher-education level."

WSC Still Holds Grads' Diplomas

PULLMAN, Wash. - (AP) - Washington State college has announced that it has about 200 unclaimed diplomas dating back to 1901 sitting in the registrar's office collecting dust.

Registrar Claude Simpson said one diploma, filled out in 1933, is marked "hold for discipline" but that he figures the man must be cleared by now and can come get it.
