

Oregon Daily EMERALD

The Oregon Daily Emerald is published five days a week during the school year except examination and vacation periods, by the Student Publications Board of the University of Oregon. Entered as second class matter at the post office, Eugene, Oregon. Subscription rates: $5 per school year; $2 a term.
Opinions expressed on the editorial pages are those of the writer and do not pretend to represent the opinions of the ASUO or of the University. Unsigned editorials are written by the editor; initiated editorials by the associate editors.

Is This the Best?

Pre-registration begins today. Picked up your material yet? Figured out the courses you want to drop or add? No? Well, that's understandable, there's a lot of time till the end of the term and you can always get an appointment with your adviser.

Or can you?

We're still not completely convinced that the registration system used at Oregon is the best possible. There are a lot of things about it we don't like too well. But we realize that no registration system can be really perfect.

And this system of pre-registration is one thing we do like. If students co-operate it can turn registration into a much smoother operation. It's to your advantage really. We remember the days before this system when you scurried around madly on the day of registration trying to get your adviser's signature, go through the lines and attend classes at the same time.

It wasn't much fun.

We do wish that there was more to this pre-registration. We feel that the lines could be cut down considerably if we could actually register for classes before the end of the term instead of doing it all on the first day of the new term.

But we should take advantage of as much as we can.—(J.W.)

Two More Weeks

Two weeks more until final week. Sort of a shock to realize this after four days of turkey and relaxation and whatever else you did over the vacation.

We're speaking mainly to freshmen today. You older students have gone through final week and survived. At least we think we have.

Now we're doing it—trying to scare the freshmen to death. Let's stop the traditional complaining and wailing about final week for a minute and try to look at it objectively.

It's really not so terrifying. That is it won't be unless you make it so. Final week is different from anything you've ever experienced, freshmen. It's rough, but in a way it's fun.

Now we don't mean that it's a big party time. You have to study, and study hard. That last minute reviewing can really pay off. And if you haven't studied all term long, you're in trouble. Might be able to pull through with a last minute spurt, but we don't envy you.

It's the people who have studied during the term we're specifically concerned about. Don't let people scare you. Don't stay up all night. Start some reviewing now, take it easy, and above all don't start to panic. Stay calm during the next two weeks and keep calm during final week. It'll pay off.

This all night cramming can ruin you. So can terror. We've seen freshmen—and upper classmen too—freeze up during a final. They might know the subject perfectly and they still freeze. That doesn't help. Just relax, fill your fountain pen and—good luck.—(J.W.)

Seligman Sees Professors As Educators, Students

By Bob Patterson
Emerald Reporter

Lester G. Seligman, assistant professor of political science, is both an educator and a student.

The 36-year-old educator teaches "Study of Society," a part of the sophomore honors program, and several courses in American government.

However, Seligman regards himself as a student. He has a keen interest in community structure, social psychology, American politics and economics.

Student, Prof. Relationship

"The relationship between student and instructor should be one of mutual learning," Seligman said as he eased himself into a swivel chair and placed his long legs on his desk.

Seligman is a tall, thin man with short, dark hair and horn rimmed glasses. He is usually dressed in a brown herringbone suit, tan sweater, white shirt and bow tie, and is an incessant cigarette smoker.

Educated at Chicago U.

He entered the University of Chicago in 1935 as a freshman and remained there until 1952 when he came to Oregon. He received his A.B. in 1939 and his Ph.D. degree in 1947. He was appointed instructor, then assistant professor of political science and of the college of liberal arts in 1947.

Seligman went into the army as a private in 1942 and was discharged in 1946 as a captain. He worked in the army's personnel field and served in both the United States and the Pacific areas.

From his years at Chicago, both as a student and as an instructor, Seligman imbibed the "non-specialized educational philosophy" of Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago during the time that Seligman was there.

Handicap

An educated man must know more than his own "niche of learning" to be able to adjust himself in society, Seligman noted.

"Life is uncertain," he said in a friendly way. "A graduate in law, for example might be called upon to do any kind of work. It will be a great benefit to him to be able to have the knowledge to make the adjustment from law to whatever qualifications his new job might demand."

"A basic liberal arts course comparable to the sophomore honors program, is necessary to accomplish this. With this type of background, a student can move into any field of advanced work."

"To further accomplish this, Seligman added, "there should be a sort of community spirit within the university. Relationships between student and instructor should be kept on a personal basis. This way, mutual learning is enhanced."

Basic Studies

At Chicago, Seligman taught the type of program which he advocates. This basic course, which was required at Chicago, included American historical documents, political institutions, and cultural organization.

These courses were more than a series of facts, Seligman stated. The student was exposed to the ideas on which the foundations of society are based. From these a student would be better equipped to formulate his own personal philosophy.

This basic course emphasized the dynamics of society, Seligman noted. Teaching that institutions are perfect and stationary is misleading the student. This is a fault with many public schools and universities today.

Highway Commission Asks For Raise in Gasoline Tax

SALEM—(AP)—The Oregon highway commission failed Monday to get sponsorship for its proposed boost of 2 cents in the state gasoline tax, but is expected to go directly to the legislature with the request.

The legislative interim committee on highways at its Monday meeting refused to back the increase because, members said, they wanted to get a look first at the Eisenhower administration's proposed 50 billion dollar road building program.

La Grande Member Approves

One committee member, State Senator Charles W. Bingner of La Grande, voted to approve the 2-cent boost which would put the state tax at 8 cents a gallon. The federal government adds a tax of 2 cents.

R. H. Baldock, highway commission engineer, said it doesn't make any difference what federal highway program is set up, "Oregon must have the added money that a 2-cent extra gas tax would bring."

"To meet minimum needs for the next 15 years," he said, "the state must spend 31 million dollars annually on its highways. Present available revenue runs to only 23 millions a year. A 2-cent gas tax would bring in the needed 8 million," he said.

Program Termed Essential

Without this minimum program, Baldock told the committee, "road building in Oregon will soon lose the advantage gained by the 72 million dollar bond expenditure of the past five years and slip rapidly behind in caring for current needs with current revenue. The critical highway deficiencies would become a serious handicap."

He told the committee that 15 years ago the average motorist, through license and gas tax, paid $37 annually for the care of highways. He now pays only $47. "Motorists," he said, "should be agreeable to paying the extra money, which would put annual output at about $60 for license and tax, for better roads."

More Physicians, Dentists Are Called to Active Duty

Some 1300 physicians and 900 dentists will be called to active duty in the armed forces between next April and July, the Department of Defense announced.

Oregon will probably be called on to furnish 10 or 12 physicians, and 8 or 10 dentists, according to Ernest L. Boylen, M.D., chairman of the Oregon State Advisory committee to the Selective Service system.

The estimate is based on population. The coming call will have to be filled from those who received no help from the government and did not serve on active duty during World War II, Dr. Boylen said.

The reason for this is because almost all physicians and dentists who were participants in the training programs at government expense have already been called to active duty.

A recent bulletin from the American Medical association reported that some military leaders want to extend the present law, which schedules an end to "doctor-draft" on June 30, 1955.

Dividends Offered By Amazon Store

The first dividend to be paid members of the Webfoot Consumers Co-op, which operates the grocery store at the University's 247-unit Amazon housing project, was announced last Tuesday at a tri-annual meeting of the association.

The dividend was recently authorized by the Co-op board of directors.
