

Campus Highlights of '54 Reviewed

CHARTER DAY looked like graduation, with robed professors participating in the afternoon session at Mac Court. Here Dr. R. E. Kleinsorge, president of the state board of higher education, administers the oath of office to O. Meredith Wilson, ninth University president.

OREGON'S REPRESENTATIVES in the annual Shrine East-West football classic at San Francisco Jan. 1 were (left to right): George Shaw, Ron Pheister and Jack Patera. Patera is now in Hawaii for the Hula Bowl game. All three were standouts in the West's losing 12-13 effort.

"THIS COLLEGE LIFE IS O. K.," said new freshman Don Jacklin (left) as he and Brian Booth, frosh president, relaxed in the September sun on the Student Union terrace. This was one of the few relaxed moments for the harried frosh as they went through the orientation program.

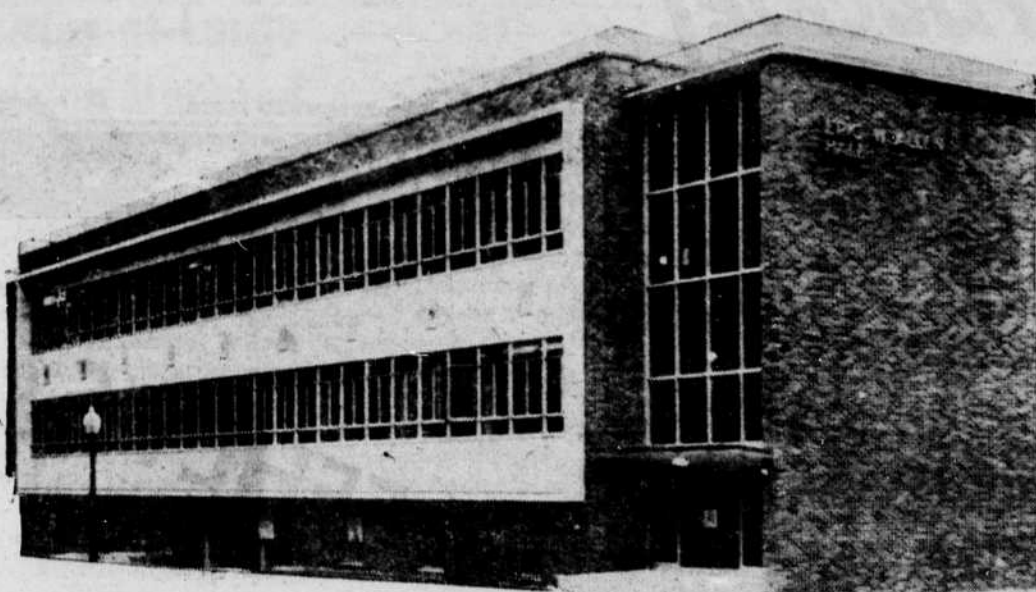

OREGON'S ONLY losers in the 1954 Oregon-OSC game were the marauding students caught by irate Aggies while attempting to light the OSC bonfire prematurely. Here, Roger Palmblad trims the spotty haircut of Fred Berg, administered by the Oregon Staters. Both are freshmen in liberal arts.

DICK WILLIAMS, well known by students in Student Union and other activities, resigned as SU director last spring term. He was replaced by Si Ellingson, who had been chief counselor for men.

DOWN COMES VETS' Dorm Number 1, abandoned by the University this year after being termed a "fire hazard" by Eugene Fire Chief Ed Surfus last year. Completion of the $1,250,000 Virgil D. Earl hall is expected to make possible the elimination of the remaining Vet's dorm.

A BASEMENT was once the journalism headquarters on campus. This fall Eric W. Allen hall opened, and Oregon's journalism school is now one of the best-equipped in the nation.

CONSTRUCTION NOISES from Virgil D. Earl hall are familiar to Carson and Straub hall residents. The new men's dormitory was started last spring, and work may be done by fall term, 1955.
