Dilliard Stresses 'Morals' In Press Conference Talk

Newspaper morals are more important than newspaper technique, Irving Dilliard, editor of the editorial page of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch told Oregon Press Conference delegates and a general audience Friday in Allen hall.

In the United States we have the best press in the world, the ninth annual Allen Memorial lecturer said, and it falls short of what it could be and should be ... we can make it better.

Citing figures on newspaper circulation, he showed that the number of actual newspapers has declined greatly since the early 1900's.

Must Be Fair, True

"The fewer the newspapers, the braver, fairer and truer each one must be," he said.

Dilliard praised Eric Allen hall's facilities for professional journalistic training, and added that it could provide excellent training and still not contribute to freedom of the press.

The journalism school will have to teach its students the courage needed "not to be plunged into a sea of conformity," show them "elemental fairness," and that "the reporter owes far more to the reader than to the editor or publisher."

Sense of Conscience

A journalist should have a "sense of conscience that will not allow him to suppress... anything that deserves to be printed," he said.

Dilliard was introduced by Robert B. Chessman, of the Astoria Budget, who was conference chairman. This was the 36th annual conference of the group.

Saturday events of the conference included a breakfast at the Eugene hotel, morning conferences of daily newspapers, weekly newspapers and Oregon Press Women, and a semi-annual meeting of the Oregon Newspaper Publishers association.

President O. Meredith Wilson spoke at the luncheon, held in the Student Union.

Hoyt, Belding Speak

Palmer Hoyt, editor and publisher of the Denver Post, spoke to journalism and pre-journalism majors Saturday morning in Allen hall, and Don Belding, Los Angeles advertising executive, spoke in the afternoon.

Saturday afternoon a series of seven demonstrations in each department of the University Press was featured, sponsored by the ONPA Mechanical Conference. Bernard Mainwaring, editor and publisher of the Salem Capital Journal, is chairman of the conference committee.

Hoyt was speaker for the Saturday night banquet.

UAL Interviews, Film Scheduled

Betty Hanneman, United Air Line Stewardess representative, will be on campus Tuesday to interview women interested in becoming stewardesses.

Highlight of her campus visit will be the presentation of "Scotty Wins Her Wings," a color-sound film depicting the real-life story of "Scotty" Sinclair and her selection, training, and duties as a Mainliner stewardess for United Air Lines.

The film will be shown in Commonwealth 138. Miss Hanneman will be free to interview interested women following the film presentation.

To become a United stewardess, a girl must be an unmarried citizen between 21 and 27 years of age, must be between 5' 2" and 5' 7" tall, with weight proportional to her height, but not over 135 pounds. Minimum prerequisites may include any one of the following: two years of college, three years of business experience, a registered nurse certificate or a combination of college and business experience.

Accepted applicants are trained for five weeks at company expense at United's Cheyenne, Wyo., stewardess school. Following graduation, they are assigned to Mainliner flights at any of ten stewardess domicile points on United's 78 city coast-to-coast and Pacific Coast system.
