Dull Says Asians Not Understood

"Today we refuse to take Asia seriously, and we take for granted that the Asians can be controlled by a few people," said Paul S. Dull in the browsing room lecture Thursday night in the Student Union.

Dull, associate professor of political science and history, stated that "crisis has piled upon crisis in Asia. These crises have produced results that have put us in Asia with people we barely understand or want to understand."

He said that "we have a stereotyped reaction to the Asians. We group many different kinds of people together. Without an exception every country in Asia has been dominated by a Western country, or by an Asian country which has taken over Western methods."

He reported that "for a time Asian powers made European countries the wealthiest the world had ever known."

Dull received the Friar's award for the most outstanding professor at Oregon the first time it was given. He has been in the chief Japanese intelligence section for the state department. He was granted a sabbatical leave for a year's research in Japan in 1952. While there he studied the political behavior of the Japanese.

Dull, who came to the University in 1946, has published numerous articles in scholarly magazines.

The discussion leader for the lecture was J. V. Berreman, professor of sociology.
