

Brides' New Fashion Boasts Three Names

By Mollie Monroe
Emerald Reporter

The "ensemble look" . . . the "three piece look" . . . the "costume look." Whichever of these designer's tags the trossau-conscious bride uses, she's referring to the same style. It's the new dark horse in the fashion race, a complete outfit in one purchase.

For a bridal going-away wardrobe, there are many variations of this triple threat trend. Smooth sheaths, both single and two piece, come with matching short sleeved coats of the same material.

Colored Linen Popular

Summer-colored linen, always a June bride's favorite is popular again this season. Many of the sheaths and matching coats appear in pale linen, but the coats flip open to reveal, surprisingly, bright linings that save the outfits from monotony.

Pencil thin sun dresses in pastels, silky shantung, and textured cottons contrast with short boxy jackets. Three piece rayon suit feature fitted jackets and slightly flared skirts.

Hats to match the ensemble look tend to be wide-brimmed. Pastels, of course, dominate, but the color of the bride's hat may be independent of her costume color. Very small feathers and small clusters of flowers ride on the crowns.

To complete her going away outfit, she will wear either white or pastel shoes. Perhaps men are shrinking . . . or women are sprouting, for trends indicate that heels are lower this year. The illusion heel seems to be the first choice, for its combination of sophistication and comfort.

The "costume look" bride, carrying handbag and gloves to match her shoes, will look lovely in the rice-covered tin-can bedecked car marked "Just married."
