Requirements to Graduate In Liberal Arts College Told

By SUE LAMB
Emerald Reporter

Only students who plan to graduate in the College of Liberal Arts must fulfill the liberal arts major requirements.

This statement may seem a little silly at first, but many students have been confused about the required courses necessary for graduation.

Almost every freshman and sophomore regards himself as a "major" in some particular field. When asked to state his name and major he writes science, physical education, speech, or whatever his major field of interest might be.

The confusion that arises from referring to lower division students as professional majors lies in fulfilling the group requirement necessary for graduation.

Some freshmen and sophomores have been told that they are not a particular major, but are Liberal Arts majors until they reach junior standing. This is true. However, these students then believe that they must fulfill the necessary requirements for liberal arts majors. This is not true.

Requirements Listed

All University students must have three terms of English composition unless exempt from the course. Both men and women must have five terms of physical education courses and one course in health education. Men must fulfill six terms of military science unless excused.

Group Subjects

The general group requirements are listed in the catalog and were listed in the fall term time schedule. There are three groups: 1. Arts and letters. 2. Social Sciences. 3. Sciences. A student must take one three-term course from each group plus an additional "option" from any one of the groups. At least one of the total of four sequences must be a course numbered between 200 and 210.

Each group also makes some kind of requirement. A wide variety of courses still remains to be chosen. Here is an example of a schedule that fulfills the necessary group requirements:

Early Completion Advised

(As many of these required courses as possible should be completed during the freshman and sophomore year to allow ample time for professional major work in the upper division years.)

Group I, Arts and Letters (one sequence must be in literature) Survey of English Literature, Eng. 101, 102, 103 meets this requirement.

Group II, Social Sciences (only one sequence may be from any one department) Principles of Economics, Ec. 201, 202, 203 meets this standard and also fulfills the requirement to have a course numbered between 200 and 210. This particular student plans to take his option course from this group too, so he chooses English History, Hst. 207, 208, 209. (The student could not take his option course from the Economics department because of the stipulation that only one sequence may be from any one department.)

Group III, Sciences (only one sequence from any one department) Certain science courses must have both lab and lecture periods. Others are only lecture courses.

General Biology 101, 102, 103 with corresponding lab hours fulfills this requirement. If the student did not wish to spend time on a course requiring a lab period with it, he could choose one of the mathematics courses which would satisfactorily fill the group requirement.

Graduation Requirements

These requirements plus the individual requirements of each major school (i.e., journalism, political science, speech) are the required courses for University graduation.

Students who graduate from the school of Liberal Arts must complete the same requirements plus two more three-term courses from any of the three groups. Additional courses are listed in the groups for LA majors to give them a wider choice.

Sequence Taken

Under this program LA majors take six three-term sequences while students majoring in speech, political science, or some other field only take four three-term sequences.

Many students have misunderstood the plan and thought they had to meet the LA requirements because they are LA majors until they reach junior standing.

Actually, no freshman or sophomore is a "major" of any kind, he is merely enrolled in the College of Liberal Arts.

Co-chairmen List Rules for 'Sing'

Living organizations have just three weeks to get their songs ready before the eliminations for the All Campus Sing. Women's groups will be judged on May 4, and men's groups will be judged on May 5. Eight finalists will be chosen from each classification.

Rules for this year's "Sing" which will be held on Sunday afternoon of Junior Weekend in Mac Court are:

1. No professional musicians or faculty instructor may direct. (No graduate student).
2. There must be at least sixteen and no more than thirty voices in each group, including the director.
3. No fraternity, sorority or hall songs may be used.
4. No musical accompaniment or special musical effects are permitted.
5. Houses not participating in the eliminations may not, for any reason, participate in the finals.
6. Dress should be standardized within the group. No special costumes may be made which cost over $1.25 each. (A financial statement must be submitted at a later date).

7. Song titles were to have been submitted by April 10.
8. The same song used in the eliminations must be sung in the final All Campus Sing.
9. A 2.0 GPA is not necessary for students participating in the "Sing."

Sorenson to Speak On Gibbons Views

"Gibbons and Christianity—A Historian's Assault upon Religion," will be the topic discussed by L. R. Sorenson, assistant professor of history, at noon today in the Student Union, Dave Roberts, YMCA president, has announced.

The forum, sponsored by the YMCA, is the first in a series of controversial religious questions being discussed by a university professor. Sorenson will open the discussion with an explanation of his topic and then open the floor to questions. Students are invited to attend and participate in the 50-minute discussion.

It will be held in the commuters room in the fishbowl. Lunches may be eaten during the discussion.
