MF Reopens; Police Guard

PORTLAND (AP)—Portland's biggest department store reopened its doors Monday, after a one-day closure Saturday because of a bomb scare, and customers flocked into the store in what appeared to be normal numbers.

Detectives and policemen were on hand, however, in unusual numbers, eyeing those going into the building and checking boxes and packages delivered to the building.

An extortionist set off a bomb in a third-floor men's washroom Friday, and sent a note to Aaron Frank, head of the firm, demanding $50,000. The note threatened a greater bomb explosion Saturday if the money was not paid.

The Friday bomb did little damage.

Frank said an attempt was made to pay the money, but contact was not made with the extortionist. The store then was closed Saturday, while police combed the store for a planted bomb. They found none.

A shortage of blankets has now become a problem for the Duck Preview weekend, according to Bob Porter, Duck Preview co-chairman.

The University has 600 blankets to distribute to 40 living organizations who must house approximately 1400 high school seniors. Blankets have been assigned to living organizations in proportion to the number of Duck Preview guests at that living organization.

Blankets are to be picked up at Carson hall at the office of H. P. Barnhart, director of dormitories between 7:30 and 10:30 Thursday morning.

After 1930, discoveries began to multiply. One of the first methods of tracing subnuclear particles was by tracing their path through matter, usually a superheated fluid, or photographic emulsion.

The first particles had almost pastoral simplicity compared to those which came later, Oppenheimer said.

Oppenheimer spoke to a packed and overflowing audience which filled the ballroom and the adjoining hall and spilled out into the fishbowl and the Taylor lounge.
