

College Teacher Lack Seen Within 10 Years

A serious shortage of collegiate faculty members will be faced by Oregon in the next 10 years, according to Charles D. Byrne, retiring chancellor of the state system of higher education.

Byrne stated this opinion at the weekly luncheon meeting of the City club Friday.

To keep the present student-teacher ration, Byrne said, America needs to turn out an average of 12,000 staff members a year for its institutions of higher learning. It is falling far short of that need, with only about 4000 being produced annually now.

In Oregon the problem becomes particularly acute, he indicated, because it will be one of the four highest states in percentage increase in collegiate enrollment.

Enrollments Increasing

Oregons college students will increase from 15,000 to 23,000 by 1963, according to Byrne.

Byrne noted in his speech that some persons contend "possibly we are educating too many in our colleges. He replied to this argument:

"Certainly we know now that in many professional and scientific fields, there is a terrific shortage...

"Maybe a well-devised junior college will be the final answer in Oregon as it has been in California.

J-School Gets Approval From National Council

The University of Oregon school of journalism has been re-accredited in both its advertising-management and news-editorial sequences, the American Council on Education for Journalism announced May 9.

A charter member of the American Association of Schools and Departments of Journalism, composed of the nation's major journalism teaching units, the school first was accredited in 1948 in the initial ACEJ program. It has been the only journalism instruction in the state to be so recognized, and one of only five on the West Coast and only 39 in the nation.

The ACEJ accrediting program includes an inspection by a team of visiting experts representing both education and national journalism professional organizations. That group visited the Oregon school in early March.

The national journalism accrediting pattern calls for a re-examination of each approved school every few years to make certain that high standards of curriculum and faculty are being maintained.

Approval by the ACEJ means that the Oregon journalism school has received approval also from the American Newspaper Publishers association, the American Society of Newspaper Editors, the Inland Daily Press association, the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters, the Newspaper Editorial association, and the South Newspaper Publishers association, all of whom have industry representatives on the ACEJ.

OSC to Get Model UN

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—For the first time since the collegiate-staged "Model United Nations" was instituted five years ago, it will be held next year outside of California at Corvallis, Ore.

At Saturday night's closing banquet for 1200 students, the gavel of authority for the sixth conference was handed to Terrell Paul Robinson, chairman of the delegation from Oregon State college. The date will be announced.

The delegates, from more than 100 colleges in eight western states, Canada and Mexico, approved recommendations for use of the Marshall Islands in future nuclear tests. These called for precautionary measures in behalf of the inhabitants.

Monroe Deutsch, provost emeritus of the University of California, told the delegates Saturday night:

"In the United Nations lies the greatest hope mankind has ever had. Maintain it. Guard it. Defend it."

Ford Fellowships Go to 3 Professors

Three more University faculty members have been awarded fellowships from the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education.

The three are Ivan M. Niven, professor of mathematics; Perry J. Powers, assistant professor of romance languages, and Donald S. Willis, assistant professor of Oriental languages.

Powers will spend the next academic year at Harvard university and will take courses in Greek and comparative literature.

Niven will do post-doctoral work in mathematics at the University of California in Berkeley, and Willis will spend the year at Kyoto university in Japan, doing research work.

Two other faculty members who have been awarded Ford Foundation grants were announced earlier. They are Howard Dean, assistant professor of political science, and William A. Williams, assistant professor of history.

May Banquet Planned For Foreign Students

The annual May banquet honoring foreign students was planned at the Thursday meeting of the steering committee of Foreign Student Friendship Foundation. The banquet will be held May 26 at 6:30 p.m. in the S.U.

The foundation also elected officers at this meeting who are: Mrs. Milton Walker of Pleasant Hill and Eugene, president of the steering committee; Russell Walker, vice-president; Mrs. F. G. Havemann, recording secretary; Mrs. Byron Waite, corresponding secretary, and Theodore Stern, treasurer.

The chief speaker at the banquet to which the public will be invited will be Kenneth Lindsay, a former member of the British Parliament. Other speakers include Miss Liselotte Georgiades of Austria, Miss Leonor Salazar of Peru, Manakkal Venkataramani of India, and Bob Summers, former ASUO president.

Audrey Mistretta will be vocal soloist on the program.

Foreign students will be guests and anyone wishing to participate may invite a foreign student, or may pay for the dinner of a student. Reservations may be made with the office of D. M. Dougherty, ext. 506.

Anyone wishing to honor a student, or to assist in the program, may send his contribution to this office, specifying for which student it is intended.

Ostrom to Speak At Psi Chi Meeting

Vincent Ostrom, associate professor of political science and associate director of the North-West Cooperative Program in Educational Administration, will speak at the Psi Chi meeting today at noon.

Ostrom's topic will be "Time and Motion Study of Social Process." The meeting will be held in the Student Union.

Ebbighausen Picked for Internship In Carnegie Foundation Program

E. G. Ebbighausen, associate professor of physics, has been selected as one of 12 professors in the United States to participate in the Carnegie Foundation's internship program next year.

The program, which is now in its fifth year, allows those who are interested in teaching to attend Harvard, Yale, Columbia or Chicago universities for one year. The professors chosen spend one-third of their time teaching and the remainder in pursuit of their own field of interest.

Ebbighausen will attend Harvard next year, participating in the institution's general education program in the physical sciences. His teaching work will be closely connected with a new course, which is a synthesis of geology and astronomy. His title will be visiting fellow in general education.

During the five years in which the internship program has been operating, only four Pacific Coast professors have been chosen to participate in the program.

Ebbighausen joined the physics department in 1946, coming here from the Westinghouse Research Laboratories. At the University he has also directed activities connected with the new telescope, which is mounted on top of the science building.
