The Fraternity Problem

should get smart and climb on this band wagon.

The fraternity discrimination clause is ticklish business. The problem has been solved at some schools simply by cracking down on the fraternities. This seems like overly harsh treatment since the local fraternities are only following national rules.

The trend is against discrimination, and it seems certain that within a short time national fraternities will have to give in as a whole. Thus the problem will solve itself without the necessity of forcing a local showdown.

Most people are agreed that fraternities hold the potential to supply the very best in university housing. They are small enough to offer a high type of group living experience that could never be found in a college dormitory.

Men of different interests, united under a common fraternal bond are able to cultivate a spirit of brotherhood and develop it into life long friendships. No doubt about it, fraternities can be extremely worthwhile.

But these virtues are unable to ripen and bear fruit when a fraternity operates at boarding house level and falls from its principles into immaturity, mediocrity and anti-intellectualism.

The challenge of a better fraternity system lies with IFC and the UO administration . . . the rewards are worthwhile and many . . . the time for thought is now and action next fall . . . so get the lead out!
