

NSA Officer Discusses Student Government

By Frank Schaefer
Emerald Staff Writer

Stanley Glass, president of the National Students Association, (NSA), was guest speaker at the district convention of the NSA held Wednesday in Portland.

Glass was on campus Tuesday to discuss the NSA with members of the ASUO senate.

In his Portland speech Glass wondered if some student leaders really know what their official duties are. "It isn't," he said, "the function of the student leader to solve the problems of the student body and then sit back and rest."

Let Students Know

"The student leader must let the students know just what problems are arising and just how they are being solved," he said.

Glass wondered if some student leaders really know what their official duties are, if they just have the titles and don't know what to do.

Too many students have the idea that student government is strictly an extra-curricular activity, but actually it is as much a part of college training as classes are, he said.

Depressing Thing

"Student government must be a depressing thing for those participating in it," he said. The reason for this is that a good student leader sees so much to be done and he is unable to do it all. This feeling of inability causes depression and sometimes even a feeling of uselessness, he said.

Delegates to the convention split into three groups, to discuss the student leader, the relationship of student government to other campus organizations and student government and self-discipline.

Potential Missed

In the first group it was decided that many potential student leaders come to school who are completely missed, and that the time to start developing leaders is in their freshman year.

In the second group it was decided that the student government should provide funds for the operation of student organizations, and that it is the duty of the government to oversee the use of these funds to see that they are used for the good of the whole student body.

On the other hand it is the duty of the organizations to abide by any legislation passed by the governmental body.

UT Holds Play Tryouts

Tryouts for the University theatre production, "Fancy Meeting You Again," will be held in Villard 102, at 4 and 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

F. J. Hunter, assistant professor of speech, will direct the play which will be presented winter term.

Additional tryouts for the production, written by George F. Kaufman, will be announced after Thanksgiving.

Under the Weather

Kerstin Ahlstrand and Ronald Peterson stayed in the infirmary Sunday for medical attention.

This group also brought up the idea that most student elections are run more as a popularity race and that not enough emphasis is placed on actual issues.

The last group decided that there should be some type of student discipline because there is a certain responsibility to the parents who send their children to the institution, and because there has to be from a public relations standpoint.

They decided that there are two distinct types of rules, those which are set rules in black and white, and those which might be called norms or convention.

Student Participation

It was brought up that if students participated in the actual formation of these rules they might be more inclined to obey them. It was decided that the student honor system is both beneficial and educational. One point offered was that one of the failings of such a system finds people with with different financial backgrounds, religious beliefs, and different social backgrounds thrown together, which creates a problem of setting up a common norm of behavior.

Powell Delivers Paper at Meeting

J. L. Powell, associate professor of physics, who attended a meeting of the Midwestern Universities' Research association at the University of Illinois last week, will return to the University Tuesday.

At the meeting Powell delivered a paper on the orbit of particles such as cyclotrons in high energy acceleration.

UT Gives 'Macbeth' December 2-3, 7-10

The University theatre's version of William Shakespeare's "Macbeth," will be presented on Dec. 2, 3, 7, 8, 9, and 10, under the direction of Horace W. Robinson, associate professor of speech.

Based on Scottish history, "Macbeth" was written about 1606, probably for the entertainment of King James. Macbeth (Gordon Howard) murders King Duncan (Mark Tapscott), so that he can become king. He is urged on by his wife (Dori Barsness) and is encouraged by the three weird sisters who tell him that he will become king.

After fatally stabbing the King, Macbeth becomes a prey to his own imagination and deteriorates as a man. To keep his power he becomes a dictator and sets up a terror regime.

The true heir manages to gather an army and returns to overthrow Macbeth. The weird sisters build up his confidence by a few predictions which seem improbable to Macbeth, but do come true. Therefore, he is killed by Macduff (Tom Gaines), and Malcolm (John Hutchinson) becomes king.

Daniel Krempel, speech instructor, designed the set, which is being built under the direction of H. L. Ramey, instructor in speech.

Latest additions to the cast are Don Brown, Dick Mohnney, Gerry Brown, Ken Hastings, Norman Laknes, Tom B. Lewis, and Robert Davis.

Exam Petitions Due For Federal Jobs

Seniors interested in careers with the federal government may take the "new" federal service entrance examination Dec. 10. Applications are due Friday.

Many fields are covered by the exam, with salaries running from $306 to $377 per month.

Applications are being handled by Karl W. Onthank, associate director of student affairs.
