Dr. Tillich Starts Week's Program

Religious Evaluation week is underway.

It began last night in the Student Union ballroom with introduction of the week's speakers by University President O. Meredith Wilson, and was followed with a very well-received speech by Dr. Paul Tillich.

Dr. Tillich's topic was "Man and God in Protestant Christianity." He spoke to an estimated audience of 550.

"Distinguished Protestant Theologian"

Tillich was introduced by President Wilson as "perhaps the most distinguished Protestant theologian in the U.S., and perhaps the most distinguished Protestant theologian in the world."

A full column in Time magazine was recently devoted to his views on the "Protestant picture of today."

lich brought out many thought-provoking ideas.

"The Protestant concept of faith should mean being ultimately concerned . . . with the courage to take the doubt of one's symbols into one's self. This is a fundamental concept which follows from the Protestant concept. We cannot remove the element of doubt," he said.

Must Accept Doubt

The courage to accept this doubt is the Protestant principle, Dr. Tillich said. Everything concrete is judged again by God, he said.

Dr. Tillich went on:

OCA Members Schedule Cemetery Clean-up Plans

By Phil Hager Emerald Staff Writer

Pioneer cemetery, long regarded as the "campus eyesore," is going to be cleaned up.

So have promised members of the Odd-Fellow Cemetery association (OCA).

"We're going to clean it up," said board member Dolph Howard, Monday night, and "try to improve it to a point that brings it up with the rest of the University."

The Cemetery association, just recently re-activated, has already taken some action towards getting the cemetery in better shape. Members persuaded the city to enact an ordinance prohibiting anyone in the cemetery from two hours after sundown until sunrise.

This move seems already to have helped the situation. According to Edwin Hansen, board chairman, only a few students have trespassed, and they did it only once.

The cemetery has long been noted for anything but lovely grounds. It has long been used for anything but respecting the dead.

A late evening winter stroll through the cemetery would be hindered by beer cans, papers, coffee cans, weeds, and other debris. One would note huge car tire marks over graves. Well-worn paths run directly over some graves.

Monuments have been tipped over and broken; grass grows where they once stood. An estimated 75 of the monuments were damaged last year, probably half of them during Homecoming weekend.

A broken-down, unpainted, rickety fence surrounds only a small part of the cemetery.

But all this will change, Odd-Fellow Cemetery association members assure.

Need Cooperation

"We would like the proper cooperation from the students. We want to avoid the necessity of fencing the property. We're at all times willing to co-operate with the University as far as it is humanly possible," Board Member Howard said. "We want the cemetery to be a beauty spot . . . not an eyesore."

The cleaning up of the cemetery is apparently the first move of the newly re-organized Odd-Fellow Cemetery Association.

Previously, another organization, the Pioneer Memorial Park association, had been set up. However, OCA members said Monday, that association will be dissolved in the near future.

University Had Ideas

In the past, University officials had toyed with various ideas that would take part of the cemetery for University use, such as for the construction of dormitories, intramural areas, or an auditorium.

Those plans would have included space for a "pioneer memorial," as sort of a tribute to the pioneers of old.

Now, it appears, it will be a very long time before there is University construction on the cemetery grounds. OCA members answer a firm "no" to the question of the University buying space for any construction it might have had in mind.

But regardless of whether or not the University ever builds on the cemetery grounds, those grounds, OCA members say, will most assuredly be beautified.

SU Petitions Due At 5 P.M. Tuesday
