"Today, the concept rests upon the person to whom one is married, with considerably less emphasis on the sanctity of the marriage state."

Takes 'Three' for Marriage

"Since success of marriage is more difficult to achieve today, the couple entering into the bond should recognize that 'it takes three.' God makes possible the union of two into one, the ultimate purpose of marriage, Rev. Spear continued.

"The couple must consider it a privilege to be entrusted with the job of bringing forth children and raising them."

In his point-by-point discussion based on the questions discussed in the lecture given by James Peterson Sunday, Rev. Spear dealt with the problem of youth in regard to today's low standards of literature.

He explained why the Roman Catholic Church takes it upon itself the responsibility of censoring the reading and entertainment of its members, giving the Church's stand that it is the Church's duty to watch after the moral development of youth.

Natural Laws Ignored

"Youth," he said, "are made to see that sex without love, the home, and family has no meaning, no beauty. If the natural laws are ignored and their results not considered, they cannot endow the individual with the rewards that were intended," Spear continued.

Rev. Spear's feeling that a woman's contribution to marriage is based on her ability to respond to tenderness and intellectual love was expressed in his belief that she was created to be more than a physical creation.

On inter-faith marriage, Rev. Spear stated that "though the Church recognizes them, it realizes that serious conflicts often arise. Thus the Church does not encourage it."

Children Instructed

"In the case of a mixed marriage, the children are required to be instructed in the Catholic faith because of the responsibility of the parent to pass on to his children those beliefs he believes to be true."

Rev. Spear also emphasized that marriage must be seriously considered, problems anticipated, and the partners properly prepared to face those problems in order to insure the success of the relationship.

College Athletics

happens to be a star halfback.

What then is the function of big-time inter-collegiate athletics? Perhaps it is to train those players who end up on genuinely professional athletic teams. If this is their function, then the athletic department should be raised to the status of a professional school. But this is not likely to be acceptable to many university administrators.

Athletics are obviously not set up to entertain or enlighten university students (Portland games are a good local example). It's hard to see how nearly-professional athletics benefit universities when one views the contradictions between their goals and those of athletics.

Aside from the obvious answer of the athletic department, the only real beneficiary is the anonymous sports fan who sits in the bleachers or in front of his television set and is entertained by the action.

Such entertainment of the general public on the cultural level of "I Love Lucy" or professional wrestling seems hardly the proper function of any part of a good university.

Further beliefs of the Islam religion were given by Medhi, stressing the de-emphasis of polygamy.

"The Moslems are almost unanimously monogamous because of the stipulation that 'a man may marry four women provided he is just and can love them all equally. This, he said, is difficult to do because the belief prevails that no man is just. Today, polygamy is forbidden under civil law in many of the Arab states."

Arab Custom Given

"The custom," he explained, "in Arabia is such that the mother finds the son a wife. However, this doesn't occur today in the large cities among the educated people."

Medhi feels that the custom will disappear when the country becomes wealthy.

"Marriage must be based on the mutual respect of the individual as a life-long partner. Each member should be independent yet together," he added. The modern feeling is that the two persons, free and equal, must be willing and aware of the responsibilities in order to enter into a healthy relationship."

A question-and-answer period followed the talks, in which it was pointed out that there is little controversy among the Moslems as to inter-faith marriages. They are permitted, in the belief that all who believe in God are saved, he said. The children are left to choose their beliefs after being exposed to all faiths.
