

LOOKING OVER SOME LPs BEFORE GOING TO BED, Gamma Phi Betas Marianne Crabtree and Wanda Gae Roberson like to relax and listen to records in slumbertogs. Marianne chooses a version of the Granny Gown in a shorter, street-length. Her gown is made in a cotton flannelette and is frosted with eyelet and ribbon trim. Wanda Gae likes the feminine appeal of a batiste nightdress. Waltz-length, this scooped-necked "nightie" is ideal for cool summer sleeping or for heated winter sleeping quarters. Marianne is a sophomore from Eugene majoring in elementary education. Wanda, a senior from Corvallis, is a foreign language major. (Emerald photos by Paul Turner).

KNITS ARE EVERYWHERE . . . and nightwear is no exception. Junior Phoebe Lou Braun models a "Bell Boy" rendition of the classic pajama in a fine cotton knit. Long, skinny leotard pants contrasted with a pert brass-buttoned jacket are Phoebe Lou's choices for nighttime comfort. A sociology major from Salem, Phoebe Lou is a Gamma Phi Beta.

WAKING UP to a cup of coffee, Judy Dameron, sophomore in sociology dons a pink and white candy striped duster. Fashioned in rayon taffeta, this duster has new "back interest" . . . via the perky bow and streamers that cascade down the back and the extending flare of the skirt. Model Judy is an Alpha Chi Omega from Eugene.

Shots Suggested To Combat Flu

"Now is an ideal time for students to receive flu shots," claims F. N. Miller at the Infirmary. "Be cause, although the flu epidemic has subsided at present, another wave of the flu has been predicted in February and March."

It is Miller's belief that completed immunity can be reached if students will take advantage of the flu shots. He also encourages students to take the series of polio shots or to complete the series they have started.

It has been proved that almost complete immunity from paralytic polio can be achieved if all three of the shots are taken.

Polio shots are given every Tuesday at noon; flu shots are available at the infirmary each weekday until 4 p.m.

After a long night of studying . . . what could be more appealing than a fresh, warm bed? And for your trips to dreamland, you'll want nightwear that is comfortable, serviceable, washable and attractive.

Sleepwear varies from long, skinny leotards to loose granny gowns . . . there being a happy medium for almost any taste. Beruffled or tailored, long or short, figured or plain—there's—a choice waiting for you.

Design trends from the rest of the fashion world can be seen in nighttime attire. Knits are seen everywhere . . . they can be found in sleepwear; the blazer is enjoying popularity . . . you'll find it in pj designs; bermudas rate top billing on some lounging lists . . . many pajama bottoms have been cropped to bermuda length.

For an after-hours party (a party after 1 o'clock closing) why not be present for the excitement in a knit middy top and long knit trousers? This pajama combination has a tweed-effect knit in the trousers that repeats itself in the stripes of the top. This top can also double as a pedal-pusher counterpart. Comfy . . . ?

If you're one who likes to study in pajamas, you might go in for the Byronic approach. A heroically collared shirt joins striped, narrow pants, via a brilliant twist of sash. The sleeves of the blouse double back to form wide cuffs.

When it comes to sleeping accommodations on a campus, it seems that no one has invented a solution to the too hot or too cold problem.

As a dorm dweller, you'll want a light, porous fabric for your pajamas. A sheer batiste, a tricot rayon, a cotton broadcloth or a plisse crepe would be ideal choices for you. Short sleeves, short pants and low necklines may also aid you in your fight for coolness.

To ward off the cold night aires of the sleeping porch, brushed rayon, cotton flannelette and cotton challis are good protectors. You'd be toasty warm in a full-length red granny gown with long sleeves. White eyelet trim adorns the collar and yoke for a feminine touch.

Just as you think of choosing something comfortable and at-
