

Proposed Judiciary Board . . .

ishments were meted out. If, in a very large family, this disciplinary function were to be delegated to a selected group of children the same would be true. They would all, in short, want to act as a check on their own disciplinary actions. The same situation would—and should—exist under the proposed student court.

This suggests logically that student court proceedings should be open to students and to their press. For if students cannot, or will not, check their own disciplinary actions, then the administration must do it. And that would place disciplinary proceedings in roughly the same position as they now are.

The only difference would be that seven students—less experienced or educated—would take over a portion of the present functions of the deans of men and women and the student-faculty disciplinary committee. (This would not necessarily lessen the deans' workload. DuShane said the student court would probably increase the work of the deans at least until the court's hoped-for goals were achieved.)

The big objection to students acting as a check on their own court is this: Nearly all student discipline cases appearing before the court would be a matter of public record and would appear in The Emerald. At present, disciplinary matters are the private concern of the administration and the students involved.

Schreck, when questioned on this point, said he would rather withdraw his support from the proposed court than make cases appearing before it public.

The usual defense for this position is that juveniles who violate laws or regulations are protected so their record will not be held against them when they reach adulthood. But this policy usually only applies to persons under the age of 18 years.

This suggests that the supporters of the proposed court would like to draw a line between the times when they would like University students considered as juveniles or as adults. They would like students—nearly all over 18—to accept the adult responsibility of judging themselves; they would also like to shroud their "adults" with the privileges of juveniles. To many students, the publicizing of student discipline cases is untenable. To this columnist, the operating of student government without student control is equally so.

The proponents and supporters of the student court are not trying to create it as a remedy for an unjust disciplinary system because, except in isolated cases, there is no general student dissatisfaction with the administration's disciplinary policies and procedures. Rather, the court is being proposed principally "to broaden the scope of student government and to permit students to take a more active part in their own governing."

If this worthwhile goal is to be achieved, a great deal more thought and consideration must go into setting up the court than has so far been shown.

Classic 'Fish' Tale

VANCOUVER, Wash. (P)—A fisherman Thursday found a lunch sack floating down the Lewis River. Inside the sack were sandwiches and a set of false teeth.

Ex-Secretary Heads Firm After Heeding Own Advice

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (P)—A woman who operates a 100 million dollars a year business gives this success tip to aspiring young secretaries: "Don't concentrate on marrying the boss's son. Instead learn the boss's job."

Blue-eyed Miss Catherine L. O'Brien, a pleasantly stout and cheerful woman in late middle age, followed her own advice.

Helped Start Stanley Co.

One of seven children of an Irish electrician, she went to work at 17. In 1931, she quit a good-paying job as secretary for an insurance firm to help the late Frank Stanley Beveridge found the Stanley Home Products Co. in Westfield, Mass.

The first year it did a business of only $72,000.

"I had to learn the boss's business, because I had to help in everything" recalled Miss O'Brien. "In addition to typing letters, I learned to do the buying, keep the books, help supervise manufacture and distribution."

"I even put the handles in the brushes we sold, and packed the orders."

Rung by Rung

Rung by rung she climbed the ladder. In 1951 she became president of the firm. With the help of only one vice president, a man, Miss O'Brien now directs some 4,000 employees and 25,000 dealers mostly housewives across the nation.

She is also a director for three banks, is active in several philanthropic organizations. Her annual income from salary and investments is more than $100,000.

Never a "yes woman" herself, Miss O'Brien doesn't believe in surrounding herself with "yes men." But she has little trouble dealing with her own male executives, and explained with a smile: "I'm in a fortunate position, I hired most of them myself over the years."

Here are some of her thoughts on women in industry:

"It is definitely harder for a woman to get ahead in business than for a man. Any woman who wants to get ahead must realize and accept this, and go on from there."

"In dealing with men a woman should never be domineering. Men are dominated by woman all their lives — by mothers, teachers, wives. They think women are always carping. Give them praise instead. They blossom with appreciation. A word of praise can often get you over a tight situation faster than all the logic of Aristotle."

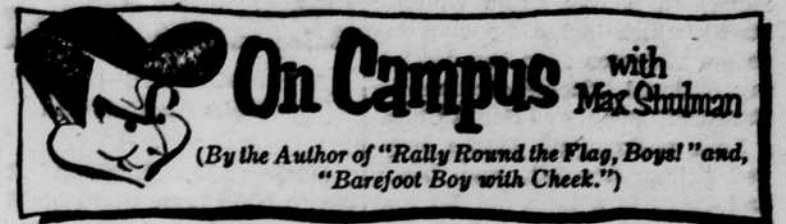

"Pamper the Tootsies"

"For heaven's sake, wear comfortable shoes. Many women have lost golden opportunities because of an unfortunate remark, or a chilling display of temper, caused by her aching feet."

What causes most women to fail to achieve success?

"Unwillingness to pay the price" said Miss O'Brien firmly. "The price of success for a woman is loneliness. If she isn't willing to make her job her life, she should give up the idea of that kind of success."

A FRAT TO REMEMBER

Every year, as we all know, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Collegiate Fraternities awards a highly coveted prize to the fraternity house which, in its judgment, has done the most to promote and enhance the fraternity way of life. The prize this year—eight hundred pounds of putty—goes to the Alpha Hernia chapter of the South Dakota College of Dentistry and Renaissance Art.

The award this year is exceptionally richly deserved, for the Alpha Hernia house is the very model of all a fraternity should be. It is, first of all, a most attractive house physically. The outside walls are tastefully covered with sequins. Running along the upper story is a widow's walk, with a widow stationed every three feet. Moored to the chimneypot is the Graf Zeppelin.

Indoors the house gives an impression of simple, casual charm. The chapter room is furnished in homey maple and chintz, with a dash of verve provided by a carp pool three hundred feet in diameter. A waterspout rises from the center of the pool with the housemother bouncing on the top.

Members' rooms are gracious and airy and are provided with beds which fold into the wall and are never seen again. Each room also has a desk, a comfortable chair, a good reading lamp, and a catapult for skeet-shooting. Kidney-shaped desks are available for kidney-shaped members.

Perhaps the most fetching feature of the house are the packs of Marlboros stacked in heaps wherever one goes. If one wishes to enjoy a fine filtered cigarette in any room of the house, all one need do is reach out one's hand in any direction and pick up a Marlboro. Then one rubs two pledges together, lights one's Marlboro, and puffs with sweet content the tastiest smoke the mind of man has yet devised.

The decor, the grace, the Marlboros, all combine to make Alpha Hernia a real gasser of a fraternity. But a fraternity is more than things; it is also people. And it is in the people department that Alpha Hernia really shines.

Alpha Hernia has among its members the biggest BMOCs on the entire campus of the South Dakota College of Dentistry and Renaissance Art. There is, for instance, William Makepeace Sigafos, charcoal and bun chairman of the annual Stamp Club outing. Then there is Dun Rovin, winner of last year's All-South Dakota State Monopoly Championship, 135 Pound Class. Then there is Rock Schwartz, who can sleep standing up. Then there is Tremblant Placebo, who can crack pecans in his armpits. Then there is Ralph Tungsten, who went bald at eight.

But why go on? One can see what a splendid bunch of chaps there is in Alpha Hernia, and when one sees them at the house in the cool of the evening, all busy with their tasks—some picking locks, some playing Jacks-or-Better, some clipping Playboy—one's heart fills up and one's eyes grow misty, and one cannot but give three cheers and a tiger for Alpha Hernia, fraternity of the year!

And, if you don't mind, a rousing huzzah for Marlboro, cigarette of the year, whose makers take pleasure in picking up the tab for this column.

Letters to the Editor

"I don't know," as he wandered out. The other was that "efficient, satisfied" and all-too-familiar stereotype of much of today's thinking, the letter to the editor which said in effect, "Nothing, and don't push me because I'm realistic."

A question was asked in the play, "Is the risk of the road to peace worse than the certainty of the road to war?" Our letter writer seems to have answered this, "Yes—the nature of the world being what it is, we have no choice."

If the play was satirical it was also prophetic. In a portion written by the physicist Dr. Lewis Ridenour over ten years ago the sputniks are fairly accurately predicted. In this same scene another frightening observation was made that has recently been horribly demonstrated in the French bombing in Tunisia, where the vital decision was made by an obscure colonel—Bigger and bigger decisions are being made by smaller and smaller people. If we continue preparing to fight, we will, and surely die.

Druids Eye Meeting To Break Old Record

Druids, junior boys' sports car and forensics society, will break a 24-year-old record Wednesday by holding the fifth formal meeting of the year. The old mark was established in 1934, when Druids were instrumental in painting the Faculty Club and were active in other charity projects.

The meeting will take place in the vicinity of the Emerald office, at 3 p.m., according to Fidel Castro, Druids whip.
