

TODAY! DUCKS VS. BEAVERS

READY FOR ACTION in this afternoon's annual "Civil War" battle between Oregon and Oregon State are Ron Miller (left), Beaver wingback, and Webfoot end Alden Kimbrough. Miller, the only junior in Tommy Prothro's starting lineup, ran 85 yards for a touchdown against Stanford last weekend, and is extremely dangerous on kickoff returns, while Kimbrough, Oregon's greatest all-around end in many years, does everything well on the gridiron, and will be out to make his final Webfoot performance a memorable one.

Beavers . . .

Oregon State has had a rough season—and that's all there is to it.

The Beavers have won only two games all year against a rugged schedule that included three inter-sectional contests. They have lost seven times.

The line, from end to end, will consist entirely of seniors, and only one junior, wingback Ron Miller, appears to have a starting position nailed down, although sophomore tailback Don Kasso will undoubtedly see a large share of playing time at tailback.

The Beavers, always a colorful team, have electrified fans with several long-distance scoring plays this year.

For example: Center Bruce Hake ran 88 yards for a touchdown against Washington with an intercepted pass; wingback Ron Miller covered 85 yards on a kickoff return against Stanford; wingback Art Gilmore ran 85 yards for a score against Idaho; blocking back Marne Palmateer raced 78 yards with an intercepted throw to set up a touchdown against Michigan; and Miller came through with a 56-yard reverse against WSU.

Plays like these have enabled the Beavers to surprise several favored opponents, even though they've defeated only Idaho and California.

Strangely enough, though, the Staters present an awesome case based on those two victories.

The Orangemen scored a total of 90 points—an average of 45 per game.

Ducks . . .

Every Saturday this fall has been a happy one for Oregon—except October 24.

And that one afternoon, a rainy day in Portland, the Webfoots blew a two-touchdown lead and lost to Washington, 13-12.

Outside of that game, the Ducks have gone unbeaten in recording their most successful season in 11 years.

The Webfoots have been interesting to watch during the first nine games of the season—they've displayed a powerful offense, a defense that gets tough when it counts, and an all-around determination that has seen them come from behind on six different occasions to win.

An outstanding quarterback, two booming fullbacks, and a pair of shifty halfbacks have sparked an attack that has scored 202 points—104 more than the 1958 squad could tally.

The Ducks are still in the Rose Bowl race as a result of this, and a victory this afternoon (no easy task) coupled with a Washington State victory over Washington would give Oregon the inside track since the Webfoots have beaten the Cougars twice.

This possibility, plus the fact that it's Homecoming time in Eugene, will give the Ducks plenty of reasons for wanting to win.

Naturally, the Webfoots will be favored, but records mean nothing when the Ducks and Beavers get together.

As far as Oregon is concerned, OSC is undefeated.
