

Frosh co-eds assisted by counselors

Frequent discussions, various duties, and a program of training are some of the activities required of counselors, who assist the housemothers in caring for the 2,000 women students who live in University housing.

To assist these women by counseling them concerning all kinds of college problems, both personal and academic is one of the counselor's primary duties. Counselors must spend a good deal of time with each woman at their living organization, especially in the first part of the year, to establish a "common ground" between herself and the students. It is also necessary for the counselor to have periodic talks with the students, to discuss her progress in college.

The counselor is responsible for the encouragement of positive and responsible citizenship on the part of the group with which she works and the individual students within that group. In addition to individual counseling, she carries out this phase of her responsibility by group work, and by setting the example in her own behavior.

Duties named

A counselor is occasionally asked to perform small administrative tasks such as distributing housing bills. She is also responsible for checking her students into the hall when they arrive, making room assignments, assuring that the hall is vacated in proper condition during vacations, and correctly dismissing students when they leave the hall permanently. In addition, she may make changes as requested and as she things appropriate.

The counselor performs a very necessary and important public relations function. She is often the only official of the University that parents meet personally, and they often view the University as they see it through her.

Training required

An Orientation Program is held prior to the beginning of the academic year to provide for training and planning. In addition, a weekly luncheon meeting of all staff members, a weekly coffee meeting of the staff by areas, and an occasional in-service training session complete the program.

Address scheduled by Chinese consul

The Honorable Yun-cheng Lu, consul general of the Republic of China consulate in Seattle, Washington, will give an address in the Student Union on Tuesday, 7:30 p.m.

Lu, who has also been stationed in Cairo, Egypt, and Macassar, Indonesia, will speak on "Communism's Threat to Asia." He has been consul general in Seattle since 1955.

Born in Haimen, Kiangsu, China, in 1919, Lu married Frances Yeh of Kwangtung, China in 1945. They have two children. Lu received an LL.B. degree at Soochow University in China.

Prior to becoming consul general, Lu was chief of the U.S. affairs section and in 1952 became a special assistant and secretary to the minister of foreign affairs.

Lu is sponsored by the University International Relations Club.
