

Letters to the Editor

found most of them to be "straw men" raised by the publishers.

Management's negotiators had given the craft union the run-around in 18 pre-strike bargaining sessions. As the weeks pass by with no progress toward settlement, despite concessions by the Stereotypers, it is becoming increasingly clear that management has plotted a cold-blooded experiment to find a formula for destroying newspaper unions.

Strike insurance, professional strikebreakers and cold rejection of any efforts of public officials to find a middle way are all ingredients of the formula.

The publishers claim we violated our contract. Nothing in our contract or in federal law requires a union member to cross a picket line.

SOME ASK if we are not different from printers, stereotypers and pressmen, if we are not professional persons and thereby somehow exempt from the harsh realities of a strike. We consider ourselves professionals. We also consider ourselves honest trade unionists.

As union members we see no honorable course but to support the strike; as professionals we regret the biased reporting of strike incidents and the sad state of journalism to which two great newspapers have now declined.
