

Ted Kennedy speaks . . .

Senator Morse's chances were in the Oregon primary, Ted said the main trouble would lie in dispelling the "local boy" image and in getting rid of the "What's an outsider doing here?" idea.

"I THINK we will defeat Morse, and this will be a greater victory even than West Virginia," he stated. "The same thing that helped Jack out there, against Humphrey, will hold true in Oregon. Jack is considered a serious candidate for the nomination. A vote for Morse would be insignificant at the national convention. So why waste a vote?"

One student asked how Jack Kennedy felt about taking the vice-president's role.

"HE HAS INDICATED that he definitely will not take it," the speaker replied. "Why should he? For one thing, he feels the vice-president is too limited constitutionally. And there's not much chance for another Nixon. He'd be gambling away eight years."

Ted dismissed as "improbable" the possibility that his father's influence would affect the primaries.

"OUR FATHER has been out of politics for a long time," he said. "He still has a lot of good ideas, but he keeps them mainly to himself."

Answering another question, he said it was unlikely his father's work on a Shipping Commission years ago would garner many sailor's votes.

He told one student that despite Senator Humphrey's withdrawal after the defeat in West Virginia, his name will remain on the ballot, "because they are already printed."

SPEAKING BRIEFLY on the religious issue, Ted said, "It has definitely been buried. Using religion as an issue is now completely unjustified."

"Does Kennedy expect much opposition from organized labor?" one student asked.

"No. We've carried all the major industrial cities and areas so far," Ted replied. "We've had good cooperation especially from top leadership but have missed some votes on the secondary level. On the whole, industry has given us good support."

He closed the forum with a request for local Democrats to help with last-minute campaigning.

INTERESTED students should contact Mike Forrester, Ext. 491.

Ted Kennedy addressed labor groups in Eugene later in the evening.

Church notes

By JAN KAUTTO

Emerald Religion Editor

Religious foundations and churches in the Eugene area are extending this weekend a joint welcome and invitation to University parents to visit and meet with the ministers and religious directors of campus organizations.

Several of the religious houses have planned special programs to bring students and parents together.

CHRISTIAN HOUSE will host parents at the annual Mothers' Breakfast, Sunday, May 15, at 8:45 a.m. Presiding at the breakfast will be Orin Bruton. Students wishing to attend must make their reservations before Sunday. Tickets are 75 cents each.

"Refugees East and West," will be the topic for the Sunday evening program. Henry Chau, junior in chemistry at the University will speak on the refugee problems in Hong Kong. Taking the situation in the East, Gloria Haggard will describe conditions among Arab refugees. A snack supper at 5 p.m. will precede the program.

My secret . . .

for being today's secret sorrow. Five tons of frozen beef, a complete seven channel stereo, a complete set of mahogany dishes, a giant 200-inch color tv, a lifetime supply of chicken fat, and the Queen Mary!"

"Hot damn!" said Mrs. Wick-erstar, "just what I always wanted." As the audience broke into a riot of uninhibited joy a mighty blast on the organ brought the program to an end before the commercial was over. I never did find the answer to the question of "Does she, or Doesn't she?"
