Dr. Karchmer talks on Broadway

Sylvan N. Karchmer, associate professor in the writing department, gave a talk on "Broadway", New York's theatrical district, Thursday evening at the monthly meeting of Chi DeLa Phi.

Dr. Karchmer said that although Broadway is the "Mecca of playwriting," the theater, as such, represents a highly commercial market that is not interested in great art but in a commodity that will make money for those involved in a play's production.

For a play to be considered a "hit," it must run long enough to repay the original investment which might be anywhere from $150,000 to $600,000. Out of the 70 or 80 plays that are successful enough to merit a Broadway production, only six to ten of these will be hits.

In closing Dr. Karchmer expressed that we need not be pessimistic toward the theater of Broadway, for out of America's 26,500,000 playgoers, 25,000,000 of them attend our college and small community theaters.
