... Rubin Speech

great mass of unbelievably poor. Less than two per cent of the people own more than 50 per cent of the land. During 1961, population increased five times faster than they raised their goods and services," he said.

He added that Latin America needs 500,000 new teachers and classrooms for 19,000,000 children awaiting their turn for education, and that more than half the total population of those countries are undernourished, diseased, and don't have beds to sleep in.

THERE ARE deep and persistent rumblings, Rubin said, for change on the part of the impoverished peoples.

"They are stirring and restless—unsure of their direction, but willing to do better for themselves and their children by whatever change is necessary. They want results. They want action."

COMMUNISM and Castroism pose a great threat because of the great unrest, he said.

"The Communists are indefatigable fighters. They have an immense capacity to subordinate means to ends. Their devotion is staggering. Every fault of U.S. diplomacy and enterprise is exaggerated, and with some success."

RUBIN SAID that although he was not optimistic, he felt there was hope for the United States to prevent the rise of new Castros in other Latin American countries.

He spoke for dynamic leadership on the part of the United States, and for more trained personnel to be sent to Latin America, in conjunction with more economic aid and technical assistance.

"I SUPPORT the concept of self-help as an ingredient in these programs," he said.

Will the peoples agree with this concept?

"ALTHOUGH I'm not bubbling with optimism, I don't think the task is impossible," Rubin concluded.

STILL TWISTING at press time, Carson Two girls had 52 hours logged at 8 p.m. Tuesday night, and were shooting for an even 100. Among many girls twisting by day and night in half-hour shifts is Pam Gilkison, above.
