Professor Mentioned In Magazine Story

Kenneth Polk, assistant professor of sociology, is among several Lane County residents mentioned in a featured article in this week's "National Observer." The Observer is a new national weekly newspaper published by Dow Jones & Co., distributed out of Washington, D.C.

The article, "In Rural Oregon, Citizens Ponder Juvenile Crime," reports on the juvenile delinquency problem in the area and the study being made by the Lane County Youth Study Board, of which Polk is research director. The Lane project has been awarded a $129,000 federal study grant, the first awarded to a rural area.

The publication says that Polk plans to use a score of University graduate students in his research program on the juvenile problem.
