Discipline Code . .

"The programs (of the University) have not kept pace with the rapid increase in enrollment of the student body and the changes in the complexion of the student body."

HE THEN quoted a passage of the faculty recommendations to support his statement. "The student body of the University has come to include persons of widely differing ages and circumstances for many of whom the University has special responsibilities in varying degrees, and no one simple set of rules can apply to problems arising among freshmen and among students who live in housing owned by the University and those in private property outside its jurisdiction."

Flemming then stated that "the review will lead to a better utilization of the resources that are available to us in the area of student affairs."

"The University has grown much faster than the resources of the office of student affairs. The review has already suggested that those (in the office of student affairs) . . . are overburdened."

ACCORDING TO Flemming, the University plans to add two fulltime staff members to the student affairs office. One of these people will be in charge of financial assistance; the other will be a person "who will devote all of his time to the discipline area."

The addition of these members will leave the Dean of Women and the Dean of Men more time to devote to counseling, which Flemming considers to be the most important aspect in the area of student affairs.

Flemming felt that the revision of the discipline objectives at the University would lead to a better utilization of the resource of the student body. He feels it is possible to develop house councils "with a specific responsibility in this area" and ultimately a system of student courts.

"WHEN GIVEN responsibility, they (the students) will accept it and discharge it effectively."

Flemming emphasized in his speech that character development isn't accomplished by rules alone, that it is basically a matter of motivations within the individual determined by examples, and that it is the job of the University to "set the right kind of examples."

He also commented on the roles that the church, religious groups on campus, YMCA and YWCA play in the formation of morals.

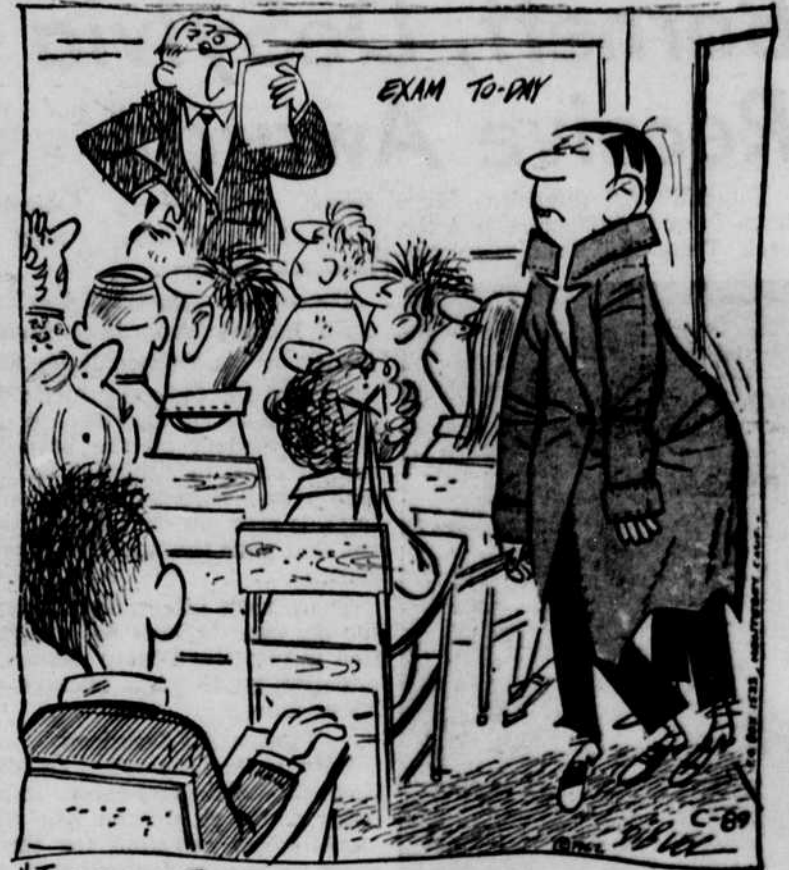

Flemming expressed hope that people with the same objectives will be able to develop methods to achieve these objectives. He feels that this is where any program suffers. Citing his experience in government as an example, Flemming said that his only regret was the tendency of people to "impune those who differ with them in methods."

FLEMMING ALSO said that it pleased him to hear spokesmen for both the majority and minority reports state at the faculty meeting last Wednesday that both groups would back the decision made by the faculty.

Flemming again emphasized the need for a revision in the discipline code because "a clear-cut statement of the objectives of the University in the area of student discipline is not available."

FLEMMING ALSO said that by the time a final conclusion has been made concerning the discipline code, "the objectives of the University will reflect a consensus of a large percentage of the University community."

In other business at the meeting, the Mothers' Club elected new officers and presented President Flemming with an $8,000 check to be used for scholarships.

"I THOUGHT I MADE IT CLEAR LAST TIME, CLASS, THAT EVERYONE WAS TO DO HIS OWN WORK DURING MY EXAMS."
