The State Legislature is expected to try to close this year's lengthy session by next weekend but this is unlikely in the face of all their unfinished work.

So many major bills still remain undecided that the legislature is expected to run two more weeks. Today is the 120th day the legislature has been in session.

This week the legislature is expected to encounter a major amount of legislation, including the problem of raising $60 million in revenue. The legislature is also considering an interim committee on education to consider unsettled issues.

Instructor Plans Everest Assault

Luther Jerstad, University instructor, may still be one of the few Americans to climb Mount Everest. Jerstad will be a member of a second assault planned for May 18.

EARLIER Jerstad was thought to be a member of the first team to conquer Everest but the only American in that group turned out to be James Whittaker of Redmond, Wash.

The second assault on the 29,028 foot peak will involve two teams which will meet at the top. Climbers Jerstad and Barry

Bishop and their supporting members were preparing to leave their 17,800 foot high base camp Sunday for a new assault by the Couth Col route, despite reports of bad weather on the upper part of the mountain.

FIVE OTHER Americans heading for the West Ridge assault have been delayed two days by weather. This route, never before attempted, is expected to take longer so the first party started last Monday.

The American expedition is supported by the National Geographic Society.

Faculty Salaries

In other action last week, a salary committee of the Ways and Means Committee tabled a measure which would have helped higher education faculty members prepare for retirement.

THE COMMITTEE directed the legislative fiscal staff to examine the proposal and report its findings to the next legislature.

The proposal would have the faculty members and the State Board of Higher Education share the cost of annuities so that the benefits would be added to social security and public employees' retirement pensions.

A companion bill would have allowed the professors some income tax benefits.

Community Colleges

A bill which would place a moratorium on new community colleges in Oregon was almost amended by the Ways and Means Education subcommittee Thursday.

THE COMMUNITY College moratorium bill, already approved by the Senate Education Committee, would prevent the establishment of community colleges in the state for at least the next two years.

The Ways and Means Subcommittee took the view that the bill was too stiff and almost added an amendment which would allow community college districts to be established and have a program if no state funds were needed.

The community college budget calls for $3,625,000 to be spent on operational budgets (the state supplies two-thirds of the operational costs) and $2,120,750 for capital construction (the state supplies three-fourth of this money).

THE MEASURE to stop the development of community colleges was recommended by an interim committee. Many legislators have warned that the program has been developing too fast since it was established by the 1961 legislature.

If the ways and means group is successful in its amendment, the budget proposed would be used only for existing community colleges, and any new ones would have to finance themselves.
