

Role Conflict of Sexes Discussed at Dialogue

By LINDA GIBBONS
Emerald Staff Writer

"Men hunt and fish to get away from women," explained Raymond Lowe, professor of education, speaking on the "Role Conflicts in the Sexes" at a YMCA Dialogue session Tuesday. Maxine Schoggen, research associate in psychology and the second member of the panel, said this shouldn't be the case. The sexes should be able to work together in all fields.

Childbearing Only Definite Role

The two agreed that "women should seek their place in the world as people, not women." Mrs. Schoggen went on to say that the only role "definitely masculine or feminine is childbearing."

Ideally, she said, "men and women should be able to choose even the married role they wanted to play," that of provider or homemaker.

Lowe said he thinks it is inevitable that women will be working with men in all fields and that the girls are going to have to be ready to accept their role as equals.

Competition Discussed

Women will have to expect to open their own doors, stand up in trains and take care of themselves, he said.

In the discussion that followed, Lowe said that "men and women don't need to compete. It is a false notion that people must compete to get ahead," he said.

Porter Speaks...

"Kennedy has done better in encouraging democratic leadership among nations and in ignoring dictatorships," he said.

He commented that Castro seems to support the basic ideas of the Alliance for Progress. The Alliance calls for co-operation in achieving social and economic freedoms of all people and in assuring the "basic human freedoms" of those involved.

Solve U.S. Problems First

Earlier in his speech, Porter said that the U.S. must "solve the problems of suffering and poverty within our own country" and that we must relate these problems to those of Latin Americans.

A lively question and answer period followed the formal speech, although the audience was approximately 200. Students seemed to be in a minority in the audience, with the bulk of those attending being professors, other staff members and townspeople.

Porter listened while one man cited evidence that problems similar to those in Cuba exist in Colombia.

Statement Challenged

Another audience participant challenged a statement that the U.S. had been exclusively responsible for a wall being built between the two countries. Porter explained that he had quoted Castro as making this statement. He added that while Castro seems to be willing to re-establish communications between the two countries, the U.S. is hesitant.

Another listener questioned whether there were groups in Latin America willing to support the Alliance For Progress. Porter cited various labor and national groups which he said seemed willing to support such a program.

GOP Outlines Tax Cut Program

SALEM (UPI)—Oregon House Republicans met in a caucus in Salem late Tuesday and laid out a six-point stop-gap program to fill a $60 million gap in the state's budget.

The action was taken during the second day of a special session of the Oregon Legislature.

The gap was created when Oregon voters last month turned down a $60 million tax program passed by the Legislature earlier this year.

A majority of the GOP recommended no increase in total taxes at the session, a speed-up in turn-over of withholding taxes to the state, legislative establishment of guidelines and priorities for the Governor's budget cutting, a reduction in the salaries of legislators and state officials, a short session and fundamental tax reform in 1965.

Homecoming Sketches Due

Each Homecoming sign contest representative must turn in a sketch of his organization's proposed sign by 6 p.m. Thursday. Sketches may be left in 313 SU.

Broadcast Panel Appearance Dated

Students of the Fundamentals of Broadcasting class (Speech 241) will appear as a panel on the "Too Early" television program presented by KVAL-TV (Channel 13) Thursday at 8 a.m.

Some questions that may be asked by the panel are: "Why does a local television station choose to present feature movies in place of network programs?" and "Do program ratings accurately reflect what the public wants in the way of television programming?"

Martin Jacobsen, KVAL-TV Program Director, and Beverly Green, "Too Early" hostess, will be questioned on a wide range of topics relating to the duties and social responsibilities of broadcasters.

Fundamentals of Broadcasting is taught by Dale Wile, instructor in speech.
