Sabin Releases Minority Report

By THORA WILLIAMS
Emerald Feature Editor

A minority report recommending that the Willcox building be preserved and restored was released Monday by Vic Sabin. He was minority member of the Co-op Board committee to study restoration costs, possible uses and expected revenue of the building.

Sabin said that he was unaware that the committee was submitting its report for publication in Monday's Emerald. "I do not wish to be identified with the committee's report, as I feel that it does not give accurate figures for restoration. They are too low and only include structural restoration," he wrote.

Sabin holds that it is possible for the building to be readily restored. He mentioned the importance of the building "because of its prime location at the entrance to campus and because of its architectural character." For specific uses, he referred to Catherine Miller Lauris' letter addressed to the Co-op Board last spring.

Rent Increase Okey

To show "an experienced businessman is willing to operate his business in the building," Sabin recalled the managers of the College Side Inn told former Co-op president Walt Evans III "they would be happy to have an extended lease to continue operating and would of course take a reasonable increase in rent if improvements were made in the building."

He recommended that the Board consider renting to operations that "would provide steady income in rents while simultaneously providing the services and facilities students and the campus would enjoy."

He said the estimation for total repairs is $26,300—structural restorations estimated at $14,300 by Eugene Schudt, Eugene engineer, and additional costs (roofing, flooring, additional exits, painting, gutters and downspouts, window repairs, and electrical and plumbing repairs) estimated at $12,000 by Phil Gilmore, Eugene architect.

Council Appeal Asked

He said an appeal should be made to the Eugene City Council for variance to avoid the arbitrary requirements of the Uniform Building Code, should Co-op members decide at the meeting Wednesday to keep the building.

"The Uniform Code, by its very nature, cannot take into account that the new buildings adjoining the College Side Building are virtually enclosing it in a chamber of incombustible materials," he wrote.

"Nor can the Code take into consideration the architectural importance of this building—the City Council can," he said.

Annual Revenue $9,000

He said that the building in recent years has earned approximately $9,000 annually in rental revenue, "and the rents have been quite nominal in consideration of the location and the size of the spaces in the building."

He said, "The building's revenue can easily pay for the $26,300 restoration in a three-year period and also meet the additional expenses of taxes, depreciation, insurance and maintenance."

Correspondent Sets Luncheon, Class Lecture

A former foreign correspondent for the Associated Press will be on campus Thursday to attend a journalism faculty luncheon in the Student Union.

Alvin J. Steinkopf, winner of special Pulitzer Award in 1941 for his coverage of the outbreak of World War II, was a European correspondent for more than 30 years and was chief of the AP's Vienna bureau when the war broke out.

Later he served in Germany with Glen Stadler, another correspondent who is now president of radio station KEED in Springfield and a member of the Oregon Senate.

Members of Sigma Delta Chi, men's professional journalism society, and Theta Sigma, women's professional journalism society, have been invited to attend the luncheon.

Steinkopf will also speak to an Introduction to Journalism class that morning.

English Educator Back From Ghana

(Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of four articles on Peace Corps representatives on campus for Peace Corps Week.)

By DICK RICHARDSON
Emerald Associate Editor

"An education in Ghana is the key to social mobility," said Georgianna Shiner a returned Peace Corps volunteer who taught high school English in the town of Tema, Ghana.

Although Ghanians receive an education equivalent to a high school education in the United States, Ghanian students differ in one big respect from American students, Miss Shiner said. "Ghanian students are motivated," she said. "They consider it a privilege to be in school." Miss Shiner said many students would often ask for extra homework.

Boarding School

An English graduate of Central Connecticut State College, Miss Shiner taught three classes of English in a secondary, co-educational boarding school in Ghana. Each student, she said, had to spend ten hours in class each week studying English.

The school where she taught from August, 1961, to August, 1963, was new, and for the first six months Miss Shiner had to teach without textbooks. The books were in Ghana, but there was a dock strike at the time, and the workers would not unload the books, she said.

Only One Text

Miss Shiner had a copy of the text and spent her time typing copies of the lessons to be distributed to students. "This did not give me time to correct any homework," she said. Finally the Peace Corps gave her a ditto machine on which the daily lessons could be printed until the books arrived.

As librarian, Miss Shiner established and obtained many books for the new school, which now has about 1,000 volumes, she said.

Another duty of hers was to grade composition exams of the West African Examinations Council.

Five-Year High School

A student had to pass the Council's exams to get credit for his five years of high school work, Miss Shiner stated.

And she also was the track coach.

"Ghanians," she said, "consider Ghana the center of the world, just like Americans consider America the center of the world."

Ghanians are not interested in philosophical ideas like capitalism or communism, she commented. "They are interested in what will work best in Ghana."

A Communal Society

Miss Shiner said she thought Ghana, a communal society, would continue to rely upon its own traditional system of running the country.

Ghana is like the little boy watching the two big boys (the U.S. and Russia) fighting across the street and then running and grabbing the marbles from the big boys while there is the chance, she said.

One reason Miss Shiner joined the Corps was because Africa "intrigued me," she said. She learned much about Africa from her college roommate who was from Sierra Leone.

"Altruism and Guilt"

She also joined out of a feeling of a "altruism and guilt." "I was aware of what needed to be done. And she said she had been living luxuriously and could afford to give up two of her years.

Presently Miss Shiner is a recruiting officer for the Peace Corps and spends a lot of her time traveling, explaining what she will go to study for her master's degree in English at Yale.

Theta Sigma Phi Meeting Tonight

University chapter of Theta Sigma Phi will hear Mary Jan Waldo, professional free-lance writer, tonight at 7 in the Eric Allen room, Allen Hall. All members of the honorary for women in journalism are invited.

Miss Waldo is president of the Oregon Women's free-lance writer group in Portland and presently works for the Oregonian. The author of a story in the recent issue of Good Housekeeping, Miss Waldo will speak on free-lance writing for women.

Accompanying the speaker will be Mrs. Wesley Richards, president of the Portland Theta Sigma Phi chapter. A short question and answer period will follow the speech.
