

Hoax or Reality?

beloved on St. Valentine's Day owes its origin to the conventional medieval belief, held generally in England and France, that it was at the start of the second fortnight of the second month that the birds began to mate.

Later on, young people held festivals at this time of year in which the girls' names were placed in a pot and drawn by the boys. Thus, the boys chose their companions for the festival.

There is no historical link between Valentine and the medieval festival celebrating the mating of birds, except that Valentine was executed during that general time of the year. It also seems logical that the celebrating of the mating of birds would definitely be a pagan festival! Obviously, the Christians have succeeded in associating the name of one of their early leaders with a popular custom in order to advance their cause. It appears that this misnomered day should really be named after James Audubon or someone else who is "strictly for the birds."

Hoax or not—there's something about Valentine's Day that puts a gleam in the eye and sparks the mind to bigger and better things.

What is the force that inspired one normally sensible female student to sit for six hours on a paper-strewn floor "building" a balsa wood peep-show valentine? In fact, late Thursday she was still passionately cutting and pasting.

Why did the glassy-eyed male rip a page from his notebook and write that deep-felt message on it?

What motivated a study-laden girl to spend an entire day searching for the "right verse"? Why this wasteful activity during leap year?

Have you noticed the expression of the card-lookers at the Co-op—the intense indecision, thorough concentration. See their little leaps when they find the one that applies.

Ladies and gentlemen, when such spirit and enthusiasm is generated merely by the anticipation of a certain day, there must be something about this day that inspires it.

Valentine's Day was originally a bird mating day, and it is named after a martyred saint. Of course it doesn't make sense. Neither does love.
