

Final Organ Concert To Feature Faculty

The final concerts in the University's Winter Organ Festival will be heard at 2 and 4 p.m. Sunday in the Museum of Art throne room.

Artists will be School of Music faculty members John Hamilton on the organ; Neil Wilson, baritone; William Rost, trumpet; and Ira D. Lee, trombone. Also performing will be Vondis Miller, on the trumpet; Robin Miller, French horn; Robert Frazell, trombone; and Sylvia Thelen, on the cello.

The concert includes works for brasses with organ by Bach and the Renaissance Venetian Giovanni Gabrieli. Of special interest will be two of Bach's larger-scaled preludes and fugues for organ, played by John Hamilton, and the rarely-performed Tenebrae Lesson for Holy Week by Francois Couperin le Grand, sung by Neil Wilson.

The festival has attracted overflow audiences. Hamilton believes the attendance for Bach's Art of Fugue to have been the largest the work has seen in the West.

No admission will be charged.

more "play groups" comprised of the juvenile members of the troop.

"Sex," Washburn emphasized, "is not the bond that keeps the troops together. Protection is the main attraction. Females with small babies tend to stay close to the larger and more dominant males.

Sex Disruptive

Sex is considered a disruptive force within the troop. The females are receptive two or three days in each month instead of going through a mating season during a particular time of the year.

During that time "males and females tend to form attachments for a few days but after the female is no longer in heat she returns to the troop, her main concern is again protection."

World Progress." Following Dr. Kagan, there will be a speech by Dean John L. Hulteng of the journalism school and a panel including University President Arthur S. Flemming, KGW commentator Tom L. McCall, Oregonian reporter Harold Hughs and photographer Frank Sterrett.

The evening banquet speaker will be Dorothy R. Powers, the only woman to receive the Ernie Pyle Memorial Award for newspaper writing. Mrs. Powers, who is columnist and features writer for the Spokane Spokesman, will present "Our Town—for You and Me." During World War II, she went with her husband when he was in the service and became editor of a weekly newspaper in Tennessee.

Since the war Mrs. Powers has won the National Headliners Award for "general excellence in feature writing." She was chosen National Headliner of the year by the women's national journalism sorority, Theta Sigma Phi. She has received the State Mental Health Bell Award and has been named Woman of Achievement for the city of Spokane.

In 1960 she won the Inland Empire Press-Radio-TV Awards for her feature and column writing, and was named Outstanding Reporter of the Year in news writing in 1961.
