

Pollock Lauds UO Delegation

By STEVE GREEN
Political Affairs Editor

The University's delegation to the Oregon Republican College League Convention in Portland last weekend was very effective, according to Bill Pollock, head delegate.

"I thought the delegation worked very well together," commented Pollock. "On various resolutions we usually voted together and consequently had a significant effect on the passage of the resolutions presented."

Jim Jones was chairman of the platform resolutions committee on Economic Growth and Taxation and succeeded in getting all but one of the resolutions to come out of his committee through the general assembly.

Endorsement Stopped

Pollock represented the University on the Party Affairs committee and was instrumental in stopping a measure to endorse Senator Barry Goldwater for the GOP Presidential Nomination.

The rest of the thirty University delegates were assigned to various platform committees and worked for the passage of resolutions that the group favored. Most of the delegation's work was concentrated in the committees on Foreign Affairs, Civil Rights, Education, and Economic Growth and Taxation.

Largest Delegation

In the election of officers for the organization, Lynn Fox was elected 2nd co-vice chairman and Steve Munson won the post of 3rd vice-chairman. Jim Douglas was appointed regional coordinator for the Fourth District, and Bob Durnell was named state campaign chairman. These positions will be held for the coming year.

With the exception of the Saturday afternoon meeting of the general assembly, the University had the largest delegation present at the convention.

the class could be given a greater surplus of money. I have suggested to the Junior Class Council that the money be used to light tennis courts and gave them information that has been gathered up to the present time. I realize that they cannot do anything until after Junior Weekend at which time they will know exactly how much money they have.

I would like to encourage everyone to express his desire for the lights on the tennis courts. With proper student interest, I am sure the Junior Class would respond by dedicating their money to this use.

Film Grant Given Oregon Graduate

James Blue, a 1953 University graduate, is one of six American creative film-makers who have received grants from the Ford Foundation totaling $118,500 to broaden their experience in film producing.

Blue, who has been residing in Eugene, left early this month for New York to begin his year-long project for the Ford Foundation. He plans to study use of the camera in relation to nonactors, both in real and in situations pre-planned.

He has produced television films and directed films for the United States Information Agency. His film, "The Olive Trees of Justice," depicting the relationship between Arabs and Europeans, won a Cannes Film Festival award.

Catholic Priest To Talk on Unity

"The Unity Movement Among Christians" will be the subject of a talk by Rev. Bernard Leeming at 8 p.m. today in the SU Ballroom.

Rev. Leeming, a Catholic priest, recognized as one of his faith's ecumenical leaders, is professor of dogmatic theology and of ecumenical questions at Heythrop College in England.

He has served as observer to the World Council of Churches and the British Council of Churches and is a member of the Conference of Catholic Ecumenists. He has lectured in the United States, Australia, and the British Isles and has written many articles for leading periodicals. He has authored two books in his field, and edited another.

Before his appointment at Heythrop College, Father Leeming served as professor of theology at Gregorian University in Rome for six years, where he also received part of his education.

He has also served as an "expert" at sessions of the Vatican Council and his degrees include an M.A., Ph.D., S.T.D. and L.L.D. (honoris causa), Regis College, Denver.

The Newman Center and the Honors College are sponsoring his address to the University, which will be open to the public without charge.

Fiscal Group Starts Probe of State System

The Legislative Fiscal Committee started digging Friday into the complex accounting procedures of the Oregon State System of Higher Education.

A fiscal analyst told the committee, "No one person in the system knows the whole accounting system. There is no manual of procedure."

The analyst said the system is "big business. Its 1963 payroll of $55 million had no equal in Oregon—even among private corporations. The system employs 14,000 to 15,000 persons. Its assets, at June 30, 1963, were $217 million, of which $188 million represented plant and equipment values."

Committee members' questions centered on how much independence the Board of Higher Education and the separate institutions have in spending the money appropriated to them.

The analyst said about three-fourths of the system's total annual expenditure is subject to legislative review.

Money from gifts, grants, and student fees for dormitories and student union buildings is not subject to the legislative review, according to the analyst.

Grid Ticket Suit Stalled By Court

The attempt of a doctoral candidate at the University to prove that student body members should have first claim to seats at home football games may have been thwarted by a circuit judge's sustaining a demurrer filed by the defendants.

The defendants in the case argue that David Ford's complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a case of action.

Ford, a graduate student in education, went to court after his student body ticket failed to gain him admission to the Nov. 30 Oregon-Oregon State football game.

The seats went to general admission and reserved seat ticket holders though he should have had, he said, a prior claim.

Ford's complaint was filed against the State Board of Higher Education, University President Arthur S. Flemming, and Leo Harris, University athletic director.

The assistant state attorney general who is presenting the case for the defendants argued that the court would be doing a "meaningless thing" if it entered judgment because it could not grant Ford admission to a game already past.

Ford has 10 days to produce a new argument. His attorney said Friday that Ford is interested in continuing the case, but no decision on the next step to take has been made.
