Economics Professor On English Tour

Raymond F. Mikesell, professor of economics, has been lecturing during the first week in May at universities and colleges in England.

Mikesell is on leave from the University during spring and summer term. His spring headquarters are Geneva, Switzerland, where he is a visiting professor at the Graduate Institute of International Studies.

On May 4, Mikesell lectured at the Christ Church and All Souls College, Oxford University. He discussed balance of payments problems and development, with observations on his Latin American experiences. He also spoke on "The Problem of Stabilizing Export Proceeds of Developing Countries."

Mikesell spoke at the London School of Economics on "U. S. Trade Policies in the European Economic Community" May 5.

Journalism Fund Originator Dies

T. Neil Taylor, 1931 graduate of the University School of Journalism, died May 12 in Oakland, California.

Taylor was born August 31, 1906, in Toronto, Ontario, Canada. He is survived by his widow, the former Dorothy Thomas of Portland, who was also a 1931 graduate of the School of Journalism, and a daughter, Patricia, who graduated from the University in 1963.

In 1939, Taylor established an endowment fund for the School of Journalism. He had contributed more than $4,000 in annual awards to graduating journalism seniors whose baccalaureate theses have been judged best of the year.

Chinese Scholar to Lecture

The chairman of the department of foreign languages at San Francisco State College, Kai-Yu Hsu, will speak on "Nature and Man in Chinese Poetry" at 8 p.m. today in the Student Union.

Hsu, who received his Master of Arts degree in journalism from the University, comes here under the sponsorship of the East Asian Studies program. His lecture is open to the public.

Project Director

A graduate of National Tsing Hua University in China, Hsu came to this country following World War II and attended the University. He received his Doctor of Philosophy degree in modern Chinese thought and literature from Stanford University.

Hsu has been on the faculty of San Francisco State since 1959 and has been chairman of his department since 1960. He is also director of the Chinese-Mandarin Teaching Materials Development Project, the Carnegie Chinese Project, the Foreign Languages Institutes in Spanish, Mandarin Chinese and Russian, and of Area Studies at San Francisco State.

During World War II, Hsu was liaison officer for the Chinese Army, assigned to work with the US Army in the China-Burma-India Theater. Later he was the chief interpreter for the Chinese Air Force Detachment in the US. In 1946 he became a military aide for the Chinese embassy in Washington, D.C., and was on a tour of duty in Europe.

Following his studies at Oregon, Hsu was, from 1948 to 1952, reporter, foreign news editor and associate editor of the San Francisco Chinese World Daily.

A writer who has published widely in professional and learned journals, as well as general circulation media, Hsu is the author of "Twentieth Century Chinese Poetry," published by Doubleday in 1963.

Smoking Motor Brings Firemen

Smoke on the second floor of Lawrence Hall brought Eugene firemen with their truck and folding ladder at 9 p.m. Wednesday.

After checking neon lights and the ventilation system, the firemen shut off a hot motor in the attic over room 207. This caused the smoke to stop.

Ted Schneider, working in the co-op branch downstairs, reported the fire scare when he smelled the strong odor of hot wiring.

About 25 architecture students milled around in a jovial mood as the search for smoke progressed. Someone put on coffee for the wait.

Finally, most everybody went home when the motor and smoke stopped.
