Armstrong Not Scheduled; Alabama Students Object

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (CPS) - A decision by the University of Alabama administration to prevent entertainer Louis Armstrong from appearing on the campus has met with strong student objection.

The administration had "advised" a student organization not to contract with Armstrong, a Negro, for an appearance at the organizations' Festival of Arts in February. The university administration denied that its decision had anything to do with race.

As a result of the incident, which attracted national attention when it was reported in the student newspaper, the Crimson-White, the Alabama student government unanimously passed a resolution asking that "the administration repeal its ban on the appearance of Louis Armstrong and his All Stars."

A student group circulated a petition requesting that Armstrong be allowed to appear, but later withdrew it on grounds that "due to the distortions of the controversy by the national news medias, (it) could do nothing but harm the university."

The group said that its original decision to petition "had nothing to do with the racial issue, but was a protest against the administration depriving the students of seeing the renowned entertainer."

"We dropped the petition," a group spokesman said, "not because our feelings about wanting the entertainer on campus have changed, but because the original purpose of the petition had become distorted by the racial implications which the national news medias have placed on the controversy."

Exactly what role—if any—the question of race had in the incident was unclear. The university administration issued a statement denying that Armstrong's race had anything to do with the decision not to have him appear, but it did not offer any explanation for its action.

The statement said "The administration of the University of Alabama advised the student Cotillion Club not to contract Louis Armstrong for an appearance in February. The Cotillion Club followed the advice of the administration."

"The university does not have a policy against the appearance of Negro entertainers and the position of the administration in this case is not based on the race of Mr. Armstrong and his group. Negro entertainers appear on this campus every week at different student functions."

"Negotiations with the Louis Armstrong group had not reached the point of a contract and therefore, there was no "cancellation" of a scheduled appearance."

"The university administration will not debate the reasons for the advice given in this instance."

The Crimson-White editorialized that the "crisis is much bigger than Louis Armstrong or any Negro entertainer. It is a crisis that encompasses and may set a dangerous precedent for the entire cultural and academic scope of the university."

The paper said the incident "is not racial in the sense of segregation or integration because that is no longer relevant at this university in academic, cultural or social levels. It is a racial matter in as much as Louis Armstrong is a Negro and that, of course, does have an important bearing on the problem."

The paper, which viewed the problem primarily as one of academic freedom rather than of race, said:

"Faced with a problem crucial to any Southern institution our students reacted in a commendable and intelligent manner. But the students are not listened to on this campus when it comes to matters affecting the university. It is okay for them to talk about racial problems in Mississippi, to discuss college mores in panel discussion, to send telegrams congratulating Southern California. But it is not all right for them to seek knowledge about how things are at home."

Group to Seek Fluoride Repeal

EUGENE (AP)—A group seeking repeal of the proposal approved in November to fluoridate Eugene's drinking water also will start circulating petitions soon, calling for the city to provide fluoride for individual use.

Eric Cooper, spokesman for the Citizens Council Against Water Fluoridation, said that the city could provide fluoride in tablets or drops at low cost to those who want it and thus "the compulsive ingestion of sodium fluoride by those who do not desire it will be eliminated."

The petitions seeking repeal of the November vote have been in circulation and those supplementing the plan with city-provided individual fluoride portions will be ready in about a week, Cooper said.
