

Feuerbergs Urge Students to Organize...

many activities which should be cut from the budget.

"For example, the forensics team gets $10,500 to travel around the country speaking," Marvin Feuerberg continued. "This should be cut entirely. Besides, I'll do it for free!"

They also said that additional money from unanticipated enrollment increases would be available to the budget board. Most of this money has already been allocated for this year.

Marvin Feuerberg said there should be no more automatic allotments from the budget. Each department must make a request. However, he said there is danger that the requests will be automatically approved unless the ASUO to improve education.

He also proposed that the athletic profits revert to the general budget. "It's our money and it's our education," he continued. "We must see that it is spent wisely to improve education."

Greatest Interests

"Students have the greatest interest and the least conflicting interests" in the quality of education, he concluded. Gary Feuerberg continued: "You can only rely on yourselves. When you organize you get power."

The brothers support NSA and believe that it should take stands on national and international issues, and that the ASUO Senate should do the same.

In answer to a question about Viet Nam they replied: "We support anything which will stop the hostilities, including taking it to the United Nations . . . and negotiating with the NLF (Viet Cong)." But they also emphasized that they are interested in educational reform, not international issues.

"The real campus decisions are made by committees," Marvin Feuerberg concluded. "Therefore we should have equal student representation on all committees."

Campus Blow-Up

Spencer Block spoke next. "I guess I'm more radical," he said. "The campus will have to blow up before we get the education we deserve. And students will have to help blow it up," he declared.

Block emphasized full student participation in creation of the curriculum. He also said students should sit in with the professors and tell them how to improve courses.

Departmental course requirements were another area he attacked. Departments have a right to set the criteria, Block said, but they do not have the right to determine what means a student must use to become proficient.

Block cited an experiment at the University of Tennessee where students were told to read the book but not come to lectures. They all scored higher than did those who attended lectures when tested on the subject matter.

"It is only necessary to attend classes when the professor tests on his presentation rather than the subject matter," he said.

Blasts Requirements

The would-be senator was especially vehement in his condemnation of general University requirements: "Why should a math major have to take English courses?" he asked. "What right does the University have to compel students to take anything?" he questioned, especially regarding compulsory physical education.

Then Block asked: "Who says classes and lectures are the best way to learn?" This is the form education has taken for 300 years, he said, and then quoted an unnamed authority: "Anything which goes on for 300 years must be wrong."

He called for full publicity of the SU Budget and the activities of all faculty committees. The students should have an equal vote on all committees, Block said.

"We're getting a lousy education," he charged. "It can only be improved by putting trust in the students and paying attention to their desires, needs, and ideas."

"ASUO President Steve Goldschmidt is starting to bring pressure to bear on the faculty and the administration," he said. But the students must support his efforts, he continued.

"Communication on the campus is stifled, stopped up, jammed; too few methods are available," Block declared. So the students must organize and get the power which is necessary to create communication channels, he concluded.

Foreign Student View Of Policy to Be Aired

"Foreign Students View U.S. Foreign Policy" is the title of the briefing to be held today at 4 p.m. at the World Affairs Briefing Center in the SU.

Ahmed Sheikh, a graduate student in political science from Pakistan, will be the speaker.

Sheikh will focus on U.S. policy in southeast Asia and especially Viet Nam. The discussion will be moderated by Tom English, director of the World Affairs Briefing Center. English is a graduate in political science and overseas administration and has traveled in both India and Pakistan.

in defining its own rules. No phone duty requirement or dress standards were written into the Code.

We maintain also that disagreements resulting from enforcement difficulties are often the basis for student-counselor friction. Consistent with the philosophy of the Code, therefore, enforcement has been removed to the minor courts when necessary. This ensures that students will "have an opportunity to participate fully . . . in the enforcement of all such rules." (Section I .A.5 of Code)

The editor's use of the phrases "thus far only two dormitories out of 40 have complained . . . and 'if things really do get out of hand' sounds like a Southern moderate discussing Negro rights. In addition, suggesting the use of elastic clauses of the Code seems to be a retrogression to the very interpretive subjective 'justice' the Code has sought to eliminate.

We further disagree with the biased attitude which, while the prerogative of an editor, appears inconsistent with previous discussions of Student Conduct Committee deliberations by your staff. We refer, specifically, to the seemingly deliberate misuse of facts. Since two members of your editorial board are also members of the Student Conduct Committee we recommend that they be consulted regarding Committee activities (as we understand at least one was not in this case) prior to the writing of relevant editorials.
