

Dialogue Debates Senate's Stand...

Goldschmidt replied later in the discussion that a referendum would be difficult.

"What kind of a question do you ask?" he said. "Yes and no, get in or get out—two or three alternatives aren't practical. I doubt if you can list all the possible alternatives feasibly on a ballot."

Former Stands

The best way, Goldschmidt said, is to "open up hearings where any student can come in and make his views heard."

Goldschmidt said he feels the issue is not taking a stand on Viet Nam but whether the Senate should take stands on non-campus issues. He cited Senate stands in past year on the House Committee on Un-American Activities apart in South Africa, and the civil rights problems in Selma, Ala., as issues on which the Senate has taken stands in past years. "There is precedent," he contended.

He also argued that many candidates did run on a platform of expanding the Senate's scope into these issues.

Relevant Issues

"If the electorate desires a candidate to make his view known on Viet Nam, they should ask him," Goldschmidt contended.

AFSC Rep to Speak

Hugh Cummings, regional college program secretary of the American Friends Service Committee will appear at the University today.

He will speak to groups and individuals about service committee summer and year-round projects, and will appear at a luncheon at noon in the Student Union.

Appointments for individual conferences must be made between 1-5 p.m. at the YMCA office in the SU. The office extension is 1858.

ed. He said he mentioned Viet Nam, was questioned about it, and took a stand during his campaign for president last spring.

"The senators want to get the Senate into relevant issues, and thus get more students interested in what student government is doing," Goldschmidt said.

McKenzie refused to accept Goldschmidt's statement that there was sufficient precedent for the Senate to take stands.

"The precedent we're looking for is the politization of the Senate," he said. He explained that he meant that senators should run on political issues and campus political parties should be formed to "channel" the Senate's political discussions.

'Too Thin'

Goldschmidt responded that the Senate must first take stands on issues like Viet Nam.

One questioner from the audience argued that the Senate is "spreading itself too thin," that senators don't have time to discuss local and national issues. He said local issues were "lying dormant while the Senate concerns itself with Viet Nam."

Goldschmidt said campus issues are still receiving heavy attention.

"If a student doesn't have time to concern himself with the major social issues of the day, then something is wrong with him," Goldschmidt added.

"Don't you think that at least the Senate's position should be voted on in referendum?" someone asked Goldschmidt.

"That may be necessary," he replied. "If you want a referendum, go ahead and have one. Any student can work and get a referendum on the ballot."

Several people in the audience argued that few students are interested in Viet Nam. Goldschmidt maintained that most students are.

"I want to represent myself; I don't want the Senate representing me on Viet Nam," said one student.

DeBerry Correction

Contrary to what was reported in Tuesday's Emerald, Clyde DeBerry will not speak at the conclusion of the demonstration march being organized for Saturday in the Park Blocks downtown by the Faculty-Student Committee to Stop the War in Viet Nam.

DeBerry is no longer the chairman of the Eugene Chapter of CORE.

According to Sam Reynolds, the new chairman, CORE is not endorsing the Committee's actions as a group. He pointed out that individual CORE members could take part in the vigils and the Saturday march if they so desired.

Young Visits Campus

Ronald J. Young, national director of youth work for the Fellowship of Reconciliation, will be at the University today for conferences and discussions in the Student Union.

Young is an authority on student draft status, and is familiar with the process of becoming a conscientious objector.

He has been active in civil rights movements and non-violence. Young is prepared to speak on such topics as Selma, Saigon, Santo Domingo, and non-violence.

Forum Airs Views On Viet War Today

Students interested in learning about the Viet Nam conflict, its history and its implications, may listen to The Viet Nam Open Forum at 8 p.m. today at 3 Fenton Hall.

Students and faculty members will have the opportunity to express their positions regarding the conflict and there will be an opportunity for expression of reactions to any positions expressed within the audience.

Panel leaders will include David Aberle, anthropology professor who has been an active participant in debate on the subject, George Streisinger, a molecular biologist, and Allen Gribben, an English specialist.

Spokesmen for the Open Forum have stated that they hoped for a healthy and heated dialogue that will give participants enlarged perspectives on the war. They also said that members of the ASUO Senate, a group that is attempting to formulate a position on Viet Nam, as well as other political groups on campus, may profit from such a forum.

Students Eligible For Music Study

Music education students will have an opportunity to study in Germany during the second University Center for International Music Education.

Participants will leave New York Sept. 30, to spend the academic year in Oldenburg, Germany, studying at a State Teachers Training Institute. The program is primarily for graduate students and students in their senior year. Any music education major or teacher meeting University requirements is eligible.

Participants will be able to earn 45 term hours of University credit while spending an exciting year in Europe.

The year will be financed by a special student fee of $2170 in addition to University tuition. The fee will cover transportation to and from Europe, transportation throughout Europe, attendance at concerts, operas, museums, board and lodging in Oldenburg, and insurance.
