

INTERNATIONAL FESTIVAL exhibit was opened Thursday in the rotunda of the state capitol in Salem by director Anant Chanan, Mrs. Clare Hamlin, left, chairman of the Eugene-Springfield Cultural Exhibit, and Mrs. E. Charles Pressman, state chairman of the Arts in Oregon Project. The display is part of a permanent exhibition of cultural opportunities in Oregon that will travel around the state. Speaking at the opening of the exhibition, Mrs. Robert Y. Thornton, wife of the attorney general, singled out the Festival for special praise for its contribution to Oregon's culture. The Festival will be held from April 13 to 17.

Dolby Receives Research Grant

A long-term Career Development Award has been received by Lloyd J. Dolby, associate professor of chemistry, from the United States Public Health Service.

This type of award provides salary funds to allow the investigator to devote all of his time to research. This also enables the institution to finance another academic position. The initial award covers a five-year period, and may be renewed up to another five years of support.

Dolby's award is from the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness, a part of the Public Health Service. The award is for studies of the synthesis biologically active natural products.

Last year Dolby was named Alfred P. Sloan Research Fellow to receive an unrestricted grant for basic research.

From 1959 to 1960 Dolby was a National Science Foundation post-doctoral fellow at the University of Wisconsin. He has been a member of the University faculty since 1960.

Business Exchange Program Explained

The University-sponsored European program in business administration will be explained at a 6:30 p.m. Tuesday coffee hour in the Student Union Dads' Room.

Designed for young men planning careers in international business management, the program involves University students trading places with Dutch students from the Netherlands Institute for Foreign Representation for a year's study.

A half-hour film of student life in the Netherlands will be shown during the Tuesday evening coffee hour.

Persons interested in learning more about the European exchange program are invited to attend.

'Affirmation Viet Nam' Group Holds Rally; Plans More Soon

ATLANTA, Ga. (CPS) — A crowd estimated at 10,000 sat in a drizzling rain in Atlanta's new stadium to hear Secretary of State Dean Rusk tell them that peace rested with Hanoi, not in Washington.

This was the big rally promised by a group called Affirmation Viet Nam. The group was originated on the campus of Emory University and spread across the state so that it reached 54 campuses.

The sponsors of the organization announced Sat., Feb. 12, that they now plan to organize a nationwide series of rallies in support of U.S. foreign policy.

"We want to show foreign countries that Vietnicks and peace marchers don't speak for the great majority of college students," Rema M. Sutton Jr., and Emory senior, told reporters before the rally. He is general chairman of the organization.

Secretary Rusk praised the students for organizing the rally and pledged that the United States would not "retreat from its commitment to South Viet Nam."

$60,000 Raised

"The integrity of the pledged word of the United States is the principal pillar of peace around the world," the secretary said.

Sutton said that with the big rally behind it, the organization would now commit its staff and "resources" to helping "colleges in other states organize similar rallies."

In addition to adding 54 affiliate groups, the organization raised more than $60,000 in contributions from corporations and individuals, plus a ruling from the Internal Revenue Service that would make the contribution tax deductible. The budget calls for $64,000.

In three months of activity, the organization has also collected the signatures of more than 200,000 Georgians on a petition supporting the nation's commitment in Viet Nam.

The idea was born when Sutton and Don Brunson, Emory's sophomore class president, decided over lunch one day that "we ought to do something to show support for the soldiers in Viet Nam."

Tax Exempt

They began gathering support on their campus and from local businessmen. The staff now numbers over 200.

Sutton flew to Washington and talked with White House aides and with the Internal Revenue Service. He was told that an application for contributions to be declared tax exempt usually took 30 to 90 days. Sutton said, "I then called a colonel in the Vice President's office—I don't remember his name—and we got tax exempt status in a week."

Meanwhile, three national firms with headquarters in the Atlanta area—Sears, Roebuck and Co.; Cluett, Peabody and Co.; and Lockheed-Georgia Co.—made executive planes available for the students and their speakers.

All but one of Atlanta's many banks gave $1,000 each. Delta Airlines gave $800 and the Georgia-Power Company and the Southern Company, a utilities holding company, each gave $1,000.

Bob Hope

Interested was also high among politicians. Georgia Gov. Carl Sanders was among the first signers of the petition as was Georgia's Sen. Richard Russell, chairman of the Senate's Armed Services Subcommittee. Sanders also gave $1,000.

In Hollywood, comedian Bob Hope, fresh from his Christmas tour of Viet Nam, prepared a 30-minute program that was widely known in Georgia to drum up support.

Hardly any potential contributor failed to recognize at least one name on the committee's list of sponsors which includes such political enemies as Ralph McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, and Roy Harris, who publishes a segregationist's weekly in which he refers to McGill as "Rastus."

Support at Emory, the home base for the group, has been strong but not unanimous. Some students who opposed the war complained because the university gave the group a 15-room office complex without charge.

The Rev. Lon B. Chesnutt, the resident Methodist minister at Emory, a Methodist school, said he and some of the faculty were surprised that the government gave tax exempt status to an organization "which is so obviously a political movement." The complaints have affected the support very little, however.

Sutton said the organization had become so large that he found he didn't have time for classes any more. "Now I'm just auditing courses," he said. "I realize that makes me eligible for the draft, but that's okay. I couldn't be happier over what we've done."
