Nine Faculty Named To Arts Committee

Nine University faculty members have been appointed by Gov. Mark Hatfield to serve on the advisory committee on the Arts and Humanities.

The committee will serve as an advisory body to the Governor's Planning Council on the Arts and Humanities, which was recently organized to develop a plan for the creation of a permanent state agency to encourage the arts and humanities in Oregon.

Appointed to the advisory committee from the University were Wallace Baldinger, director of the Museum of Art; Walter Creese, dean of the School of Architecture and Allied Arts; Luther Cressman, professor emeritus of anthropology;

Bertram Jessup, professor of philosophy; Charles E. Johnson, dean of the College of Liberal Arts; June McFee, director of a program in art education at the School of Architecture and Allied Arts;

Horace W. Robinson, professor of speech and theatre and University Theatre director; Albert Spaulding, head of the department of anthropology; and Robert Trotter, dean of the School of Music.

Jarold A. Kieffer, assistant to the president of the University, is a member of the planning council on the Arts and Humanities.

Correction

Students receiving traffic tickets on campus may appeal the decision to district courts only. The decisions may not be appealed to Eugene municipal courts, as was reported in Monday's Emerald.

that originate on campus rather than "canned" shows borrowed from other sources.

For instance, the University's College Bowl, the intramural version of NBC's College Bowl which pits teams from dorms and other living units against each other.

There is also, "Seven Days," aired every Friday, a round-up of news, and campus events.

PL-3 also airs classes—Principles of economics, children's Lit, and others—as well as showing famous motion pictures. "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" has been shown this year.

Or when it's time for the Oregon-Oregon State game coach Len Casanova can go on PL-3 and show and explain films of last year's game.

Or PL-3 may run a seminar on seminars so viewers in Eugene have an opportunity to see what a seminar's really like.

"It's the most exciting thing I've come up against," Willingham says, "It's like the off-Broadway stage, where you have a chance to attempt things without being afraid of falling flat on your face. We have nothing to sell, so we can try anything."

Willingham repeated, as do most of the students involved with the project, that PL-3 is not an educational television station. It's something entirely different. It's the first system which directly links a university with the people living around it.

so they called the police," the girl said.

She said she refused to go back inside "because I really didn't want all those people around."

She said police told her she had to go to Sacred Heart hospital "which I didn't really want to do." But she went anyway. "I had the feeling they would drag me if I didn't," she said.

Monday morning she asked a doctor if she could leave and he said "no, absolutely not." Police said she was being held for a psychiatric examination.

"My clothes were in the room so I just put them on and left," she explained. "I saw no reason why I had to stay there."

She said she talked to a doctor at the University Health Service Monday afternoon. She said she didn't want to, but she was afraid her housemother would get in trouble if she didn't.

ROTC Students At Area Meet

Last weekend, thirty-four University ROTC students participated in the Area Conclave meeting of the Arnold Air Society and Angel Flight, held at the University of Puget Sound in Tacoma, Washington.

The regional meeting was attended by schools from Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana.

The business session Saturday was concerned with the selection of a Little General Candidate to represent the Northwest at the National Conclave, which will be held the first week of Spring term in Dallas, Texas. Saturday afternoon the Oregon students were taken out to McCord Air Force Base on a visitation.

Lt. Colonel John Kreitz, professor of Aerospace studies at the University, and his wife hosted the Angel's and the Arnold Air members at a dinner in the Officer's club. Later in the evening, the Oregon delegation were the

cept" of what the stadium will include and some cost estimates.

These are presently being revised. One set of estimates will be for a stadium with a track, another for one without a track. The University's Campus Planning Committee requested this additional estimate, with the track, fall term.

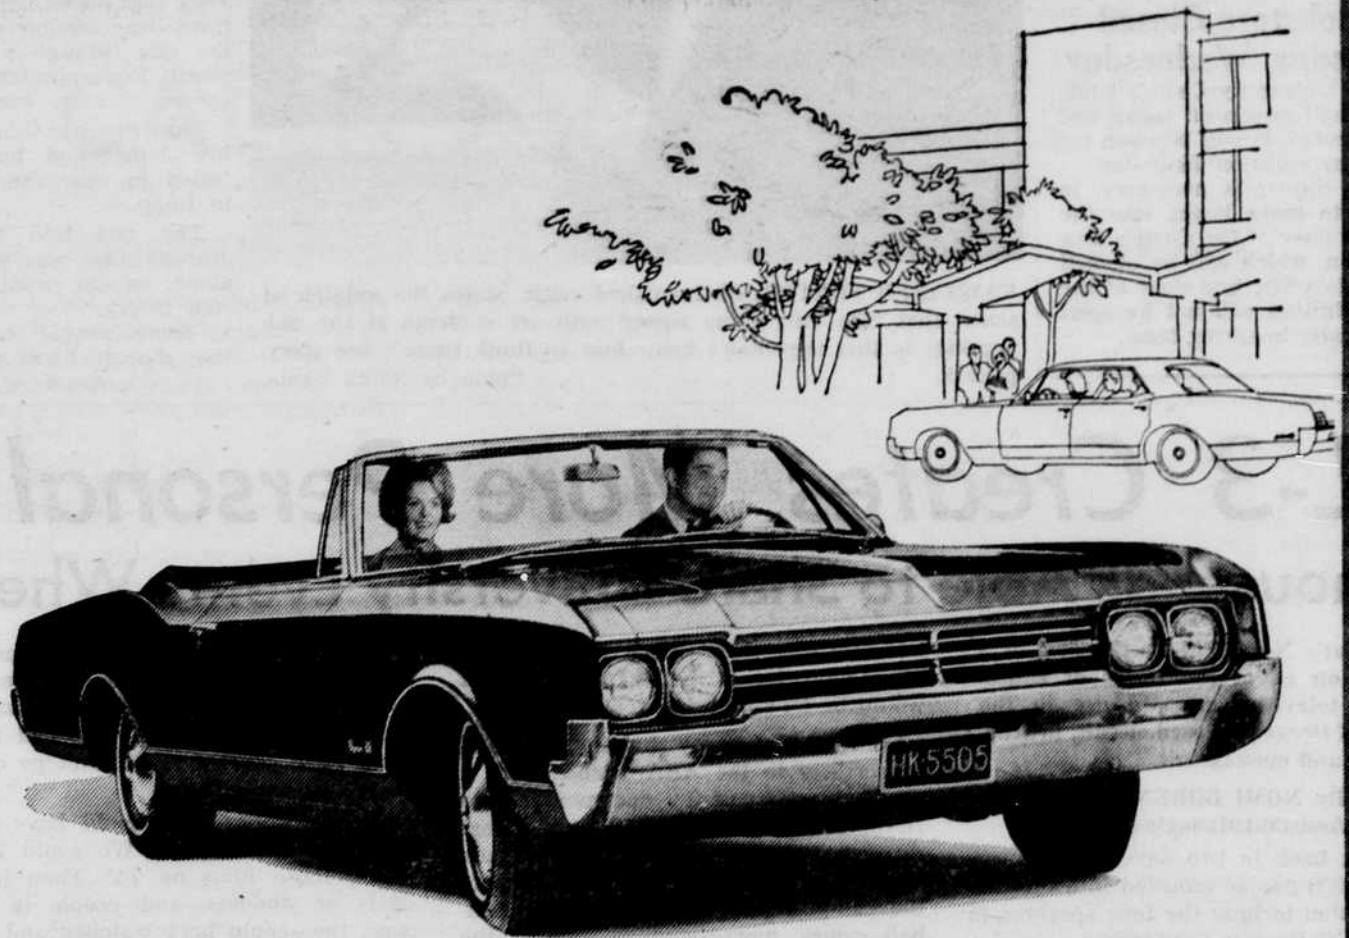

Work on the stadium will probably start this spring. It is planned for completion for the fall 1967 football season. Fleming has said the University will hold all its football games in Eugene once the stadium is built. At present two or three games are always played in Portland's Multnomah Stadium.
