

Machines to Make Merry

By STEVE DIMEO
Entertainment Editor

The machine will be dictator for a night tomorrow when a week of WUS bill wishers will surcease upon that midnight.

The computer dance, beginning at 9 p.m. Saturday in Mac Court, will get its electricity from a live band called the Coachmen. For those who paid a dollar for their questionnaires at the end of last term, the dance is free.

The student body numbers for the matched mates can be checked in the Student Union.

The winners of the "Red Hot Professor" and "Ugly Man" will be announced at the dance.

WUS will also be staging a three-legged basketball game in Mac Court at 8 p.m.

Relying rather on human creative abilities, "Cassandra Singing," a three-act drama by David Madden, will play for a second time tonight at 8 p.m. in the Arena Theatre in Villard Hall. It will also run Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

Madden, who teaches currently at Kenyon College in Ohio and serves as assistant editor of the Kenyon Review, has been revising this play since 1954. Its three acts depict the bizarre relationship between a Harlan, Kentucky, motorcyclist named Lone and his infirmed sister, Cassie.

Tickets are $1.50.

'Birdie' Flies

The SU movie this Sunday will analyze the questionably creative musical capabilities of one Conrad Birdie in the film of the Broadway hit, "Bye Bye Birdie."

The soundtrack, script and acting all make this satire superior entertainment. Feature times will be 2:30 and 8:30 p.m.

"Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines," finally playing at the Fox now, lets men try to master the machines in an attempt to try a great race from London to Paris. The cast is as big in numbers as the title is in letters. Twentieth Century Fox was responsible for this high-flying (in cost as well as cast) phenomena.

"The Great Race" with its machines and mediocrity will linger for another week—long enough to let audiences detect little difference in its slapstick and that of "Those Magnificent Men."

Sex Jets

Planes keep Jerry Lewis and Tony Curtis amorously busy with their servicing contents in "Boeing, Boeing," playing this week at the Heilig and the Eugene Drive-In. The airline hostesses they keep on kite strings include the French Dany Saval (who played a Beta Lyrae with spaceman Tom Tryon in an older Walt Disney fantasy production) and Christiane Schmidtner who had a part in "Ship of Fools" and a more interesting part with her parts in the March issue of "Playboy." Thelma Ritter also somehow fits into this comedy produced by Hal Wallis who was last year praiseworthy for his "Becket."

"Revenge of the Gladiators" co-plays at the Heilig.

"How to Murder Your Wife," the Jack Lemmon comedy of a year ago, is co-featured at the Eugene Drive-In. The story of a cartoonist who believes in living his frames co-stars Italian Virna Lisi who made her American debut in this film.
