

CIA Recruits Employees From College Campuses

WASHINGTON (CPS)—College students are used to being recruited by all sorts of groups. Most businesses have large scale college recruitment programs and the success of the Peace Corps has been due in large part its recruiting program on the nation's campuses.

Perhaps prompted by the Peace Corps success, a new government agency has decided to actively recruit on the college campus.

The Central Intelligence Agency has confirmed reports circulating around Washington that it now has recruiting teams visiting about 100 college campuses to interview students as prospective analysts and agents.

"We want good people," says Col. Stanley K. Grogan, "and we're out looking for them."

At present the government's super-spy agency is especially interested in graduate students with basic scientific training which would qualify them for photo interpretation work—a high priority field of intelligence work that was publicized in the U2 spy plane sensation of six years ago and again in the aerial photographs that uncovered Russia's secret rocket installations in Cuba in 1962.

Col. Grogan, an assistant to Adm. William F. Raborn, said the agency probably has more employees with advanced academic degrees than any other agency in government.

Under law, he said, even CIA employment is secret. But he also reported that it is known that the CIA has about 600 "senior people" of whom 53 per cent have advanced academic degrees such as doctorates in science and philosophy.

The CIA's recruitment program gained prominence when a small group of students at Grinnell College in Iowa picketed a CIA man on campus. The students displayed posters asking what the CIA is doing in Viet Nam, Indonesia, and the Dominican Republic. One reads: "Where there is an invisible government, there is no democracy."

CIA headquarters was unperturbed. In fact, an inquirer gained the impression that the agency is not at all adverse to getting a bit of publicity for its talent scouts who are in competition with high-paying private firms and other government agencies.

Col. Grogan said the college recruitment campaigns had been going on since the agency was created nearly 20 years ago. He said that candidates are not excused from the draft to work for the CIA.

While the agency occasionally gets spectacular attention for an international blunder or involvement in some great crisis, the bulk of its employees are not engaged in James Bond-type pursuits but spend their time analyzing reports and other material sent in from the field. Their task is to keep up with international events and their significance.

The real spies maintained by the CIA provide information which confirms, contradicts, or fits into some other pattern produced by analysis.

"A great many people are interviewed but relatively few are chosen" for CIA work, Col. Grogan said.

The agency is not disclosing the names of campuses on which recruiting teams are working.

SDS to Sponsor Draft Workshop

Students for a Democratic Society is now sponsoring a week-long draft workshop running through Wednesday, designed to give students legal and technical information. Draft alternatives will also be discussed.

"As a realistic student, you can't discuss your future without discussing the draft. We don't mean simply discussing what Congress, the President, or what your local draft board is going to do."

Oregon Assembly Preview Slated

Participants in the Oregon Assembly planned for Friday and Saturday at the University's Tongue Point Job Corps Center are asked to attend a background session at 4 p.m. today in the Student Union.

Background material and schedules will be distributed.

University President Arthur S. Flemming and Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity are among the participants.

Group to Discuss Political Celebrity

"The Celebrity in Politics," a discussion on the growing tendency for entertainers and other popular figures to enter politics, will be held at 8 p.m. today in the Honors College Center.

Lester Seligman, Herman Cohen and Edward Fadeley will lead the discussion. Seligman, professor of political science, studies recruitment of political leaders; Cohen is the newly appointed director of the Honors College; and Fadeley is a local attorney and Oregon State Senator.

The public is invited to attend the discussion.

Students Get Discount At Four Gas Stations

Four Eugene gas stations have agreed to participate in the ASUO Senate's Student Discount program.

According to Lee Bollinger, coordinator of the program, the following stations will offer discounts:

● Signal Gas, 1811 Franklin—32 cents per gallon for premium, 29 cents for regular, 10 per cent discount on oil changes, lubrication, and oil filters;

● Hancock Gas, 19th and Agate—32.9 cents per gallon of premium; 29.9 cents for regular, 25 per cent off on lube and oil changes, 20 per cent off on oil alone, 20 cents a pack for cigarettes, no labor charge on fan belts, or other parts when installed at the station;

● Pride of Oregon (Walt's Gas for Less), corner of Broadway and Alder—29.9 cents for regular gas, 32.9 cents for premium;

● American Gas, Franklin Blvd. opposite Agate—50 per cent discount on any service work done at the station to be offered sometime in the next few days.

To get the discounts, students may simply present their student body card at the time of purchase.

Bollinger says he hopes to expand the program to other areas, such as restaurants and clothing stores.

Sonny and Chér

They met singing the "oo-oo's" and "yeah-yeah's" for a record producer. And they clicked. Before long, Salvatore Bono and Cheryl LaPiere Bono rocked America with the 4-million-seller I Got You, Babe. And found themselves up front in the married-couple bag with five singles and two albums on the best-seller charts at the same time. (A boast even the Beatles bow to.) What kind of people are they? Where do they go from here? Has success upset their marriage? Find out in The Saturday Evening Post. On sale now.

Playboy of the Western World

He's Chicago's Hugh Hefner—genius to the businessman; Hef to his friends and staff. What's life like inside his brick-and-stone mansion with a 60-foot living room, a house staff of 28 and two floors of live-in bunnies? Tour the Playboy empire of this 40-year-old "bachelor" in the April 23 issue of The Saturday Evening Post. On sale now.
