here talking about a major overhaul of higher education.

It's students who have brought up some of the changes that might revamp the University and get rid of the standard lecture-test system that encourages regurgitation of fact only, seldom thinking.

It's students who have really started to push for a five-hour course base instead of three, which would allow students to go more deeply into three or four courses, instead of getting a quick, shallow overview of five, six, or seven.

It's students who have really pushed a start toward getting rid of grades, another foundation of the system.

It's been the same on other campuses — at Wayne State, where a student reform group has been formed; at Berkeley; at Whittier; and others.

Students have begun to ask for a voice in the running of the University, so that they can do the job faculty members and administrators have been too slow to do.

That's why students have raised their voices, Mr. Rafferty.

Letters to the Editor

All letters to the editor must be typewritten and double spaced. Letters not over 300 words in length and those dealing with one subject will be given preference for publication. All letters must be signed in ink and must give the class and major of the writer. Letters not meeting these criteria will be returned to the letter writer. The Emerald reserves the right to edit letters for style, grammar, punctuation, and potentially libelous content.

New Juniors

There are on the campus today two quite different generations of students. Today's freshmen are well prepared, hard-working (terrific studiers!) and highly competitive. They are definitely of the post-sputnik generation. Born into the population explosion, they are used to crowded classrooms. The computer and the draft have simply confirmed what they have been taught to believe in: the importance of education.

Today's juniors and seniors, on the other hand, are a generation in transition. Born in 1945 and 1946 to parents who had been through the depression and the second World War, they were brought up in permissive, child-centered homes and in schools where the emphasis was on life adjustment, democratic participation, and social success. Then they suddenly became aware that these values no longer counted for much. Abruptly, they were expected to get along, not with people but with computers, to study hard and soft-pedal the activities that had formerly been all-important—to become, in short, quite different people overnight.

This has been an extremely difficult readjustment for this generation to make. The last three years have seen a mushrooming of demands for college counseling and psychiatric services. In 1964-65 the counseling center's student lead increased more than 30 per cent over that of the previous year. Some of these students were depressed to the point of melancholy by what they interpreted as their own inadequacy to cope with the change; others, to resolve the conflict, spent hours painfully trying to re-assess and re-integrate their own values.

Some students of this generation deliberately flunked out of school, to remain near it as "fringies," with their own dreary patterns of conformity and their trips into LSD land. Some chucked school for travel abroad; the State Department, according to a recent New York Times article, is alarmed at the numbers of overseas students who are having breakdowns.
