

New Supply Co-op Will Open Monday

The new Co-op store at the corner of 13th and Kincaid Street, will be open for business Monday.

At the moment, most of the supplies have been moved out of the old store in the basement of Chapman Hall. The Co-op, however, will remain closed today and Saturday because of relocation problems.

In a Thursday meeting, the Co-op Board designated 150 Science, the Student Union, the Library, and Commonwealth as voting booths for next Wednesday's Co-op elections. In order to vote, a Co-op membership card must be presented. One freshman will be elected to serve on the Board for a year, and two sophomores will be elected to serve a two-year term.

The Board also discussed the possibility of closing the Co-op annex in the School of Art. Gerald Henson, Co-op manager, said that from a "business standpoint, the Co-op is just breaking even" and that the "annex is much like a canteen because more candy and gum are sold there than art supplies.

He also pointed out that this is a special service not granted to other students and that when the annex was closed a year and a half ago, there was no "squawk."

Stan Darling, the Co-op's attorney, asked permission to begin a survey to see if the Co-op is tax exempt. Many college book stores similar to the Co-op are tax exempt, but he pointed out they are owned by the specific school and controlled by the administration. The Co-op, however, is one of the few student-owned and student-controlled college book stores in the country.

Henson also reported that receipts are running $172,000 ahead of last year at this time.
