

Dellenback Urges Students To Investigate Candidates

By ELLEN GEZELIUS
Emerald Staff Writer

John Dellenback, Republican candidate for Congress from the Fourth District, urged University students to vote for the man who will "approach problems in the way that you yourself would like them handled," in a speech Thursday night at the Student Union.

"When you vote a person into government office, you are voting for a person who will make many decisions about which you will never know the specific details and as a result the important thing is to learn about the people who are running," Dellenback declared.

He emphasized that the role of the voter was a critical one because "there are life and death decisions on the national level which the Congress must decide."

Open Mindedness

He also touched on the problems of the politician in keeping an open mind of critical and important issues because most of his constituents want open and shut answers on important matters.

"There is a difference between the indecision of a candidate and saying that he wants to get all the information before making a decision on a subject."

"When a politician represents more than 400,000 people it is no longer important what he thinks personally, it is his job to be flexible and when the time is right make a decision based on facts and the opinions of the people."

Dellenback discussed the vital role of today's youth in campaigns and urged action on their part to have a better political organization.

New Battles

"Look forward to the battles of computerization and automation and don't fight the same political battles that were fought 30 years ago. He emphasized that youth must deal with the problems of new jobs and more leisure time which will be inherent in these new major problems.

He specifically urged youth to play an active role in the government and politics because "in America, the days are over where a candidate can win all alone."

Dellenback charged students not to be neutral in their thinking as well as their actions. "Don't be neutral, if you don't believe Dellenback belongs in Congress, it is your job to make sure that he doesn't get there."

UO Band Needs 36 Musicians

Thirty-six more students are needed for the University's marching band.

The band, which presently has only 60 members, needs 96 to do large block formations.

Marching band carries one hour University credit; except for the majorette, it is an all-male band.

Those students wishing to sign up should contact Robert Vagner or Gene Lewis, room 111 Music Building.

Band rehearsals are from 4 to 5:15 p.m. Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, on the field between the veterans' dorms and the School of Music.

During the football season, the band will play in Portland, Seattle, and at Oregon State.
