

Chancellor Offers Peace Proposal

Cal Students Continue Strike

(Compiled from UPI)
BERKELEY, Calif. — Student pickets turned out in a heavy rain Monday on the fifth day of a classroom boycott at the University of California despite an appeal by the university chancellor for an end to the strike.

Chancellor Roger W. Heyns, in an unusual move, had leaflets distributed promising "a highly imaginative" proposal to end the crisis on the 27,500-student campus.

It was impossible to establish how many students were participating in the boycott, because no attendance records are kept. Some estimates of the number of strikers ranged as high as one-third of the student body—even though final examinations are scheduled next week.

The strike was called Thursday after three students and six non-students were arrested as they protested the presence of Navy recruiters on the campus.

Heyns' leaflets pleaded with students "to reflect upon your real reason for being at Cal, to give first priorities to your studies and to the successful completion of this quarter."

He said his peace proposal would be unveiled at an afternoon meeting of the Academic Senate, the school's faculty organization.

The chancellor said the proposal was "worked out by students who care enough about this university to have put in some hard thinking about how our community can be improved without, in the same process, being destroyed."

On Sunday Heyns rejected a compromise proposal drawn up by striking students. When the rebel students learned of this, they issued a statement saying, "It is clear that the chancellor does not truly desire to enter into meaningful negotiations to end this conflict." They said their class boycott would be intensified this week.

The disturbance occurred on the second anniversary of the Free Speech revolt almost two years ago to the day. Nearly 800 persons were arrested then in a sit-in at Sproul Hall.

University Debaters Take Fifth Place

University debaters defeated teams from throughout the nation to capture fifth place in the U.S. Air Force National Invitational Debate Tournament in Colorado Springs Friday and Saturday, according to forensics coach W. Scott Nobles.

The debate team of Gary Roberts, sophomore, and Gregory Mowe, junior, lost in the quarter-finals to the tournament's first place team, Augustana College of Rock Island, Illinois.

Oregon's debaters won contests with Loyola University of Los Angeles, California; the University of the Pacific at Stockton, Calif.; University of Missouri, Kansas City, Missouri; North Texas State University, Denton, Texas; and Washington State University, Pullman, Washington.

Roberts and Mowe lost only two debates—to Augustana College and to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology team, which eventually won third place.

This is the third year a University team has placed in the top eight teams at the Air Force national tournament.
