Antarctic Diver to Lecture Friday

A Springfield high school teacher, who was diving for biological specimens under 11 feet of ice in Antarctica last year, will give an illustrated lecture on the frozen continent at 7:30 p.m. in Friday in 150 Science.

Clingman was a member of a University team participating in a National Science Foundation research program to study the metabolism of fish that live in sub-freezing, saline waters.

His role in the mission was to dive under the ice and capture various species of fish dwelling in the ocean. The water temperature is a fairly constant 29 degrees.

Clingman's 16 millimeter pictures are the first moving films to be shot beneath the Antarctic ice cap.

Emerald Blocks Out Correct Name

The comments of a spokesman for a group of graduate students seeking a change in library policy were incorrectly attributed to Spencer Block in Wednesday's Emerald. The comments made before the Student-Faculty, Council were those of William Bloche.
