by "people playing spy games. ... It's got so you don't know who you can trust around here."

McCloskey said investigations for the recent marijuana raids have included the planting of spies disguised as students and has been "harmful to the atmosphere of open interaction and trust a campus should have."

A bill allowing the Senate to place bills before the faculty was to facilitate more efficient presentation of student-sponsored ideas before the faculty for consideration.

The Summers Motion, which gave instructors the option of not allowing results of course surveys to be published in the survey bulletin, was flatly rejected by the student senators as "not being in the best interests of the student body and the University."

In other business, the Senate heard a short report from Student Body President Lee Bollinger recommending work in the area of educational innovation.

Bollinger suggested a plan of "student tenure," which would allow a student who had fulfilled 150 hours of study to finish out his remaining 36 hours under a flexible, ungraded program.

Legislation to be considered next week include a recommendation that a student be sent with President Flemming to all State Board of Higher Education meetings, consideration of ROTC's status on this campus, defense contracts, and exemptions from the health class requirement. Thursday's meeting lasted one hour.

Black Students Discuss Survey

The possibility of a research team on the academic survival of Negroes on campus was discussed at a Black Students Association meeting Wednesday.

The survey could include such items as the total population of Negroes on campus, their grades, years, social life, and academic attitudes.

Old business included a membership drive. The goal of the association is "to get our people together and keep them here," stressed President Oliver O'Ferrall.

Open membership was encouraged. "Anyone that can relate to the black man's problems and work to alleviate them can join," said O'Ferrall.

Study tables on Sundays and Mondays from 6-8 p.m. were then set up.

The coalition of the Black Students Association with the Students for Democratic Society as was stated in the recent "chalk-in" article in the Emerald was denied. It was emphasized that the group is not affiliated with SDS.

Husband Search Exhausts Coed

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Elizabeth Freedman says she isn't accepting any more marriage proposals. She already has more than 300 of them.

The 19-year-old sophomore at the University of Pennsylvania also says she has given up the idea of getting married as a means of getting out of a dormitory which she shares with some 150 other girls.

Miss Freedman placed an ad in the college newspaper last week seeking a husband as the only means to get out of the dorm. She claimed the girls were a distraction to her studies.

Only married coeds or seniors are allowed to live outside the dorm.

A college spokesman Monday described Miss Freedman as "an exhausted girl" and said she is in seclusion and not accepting any more phone calls.

The spokesman, however, relayed this comment from her: "I think we can work out a solution less drastic than marriage."

English Courses Praised in Study

A national study of college freshman English courses cites the course at the University as "a model of flexibility and sophistication."

The study was made by an English professor at Harvard University, Harrison Hoblitzelle, in cooperation with the Harvard Expository Writing Program.

The University's program in freshman composition is headed by Glen A. Love, director of English composition.

"Oregon is certainly to be congratulated for in effect setting an example for the other state universities," Hoblitzelle wrote. "Oregon is especially thorough in keeping the focus upon the problems of writing."

In the graduate field, "The University presents the best example of an integrated training program for graduate students," the report found.

Graduate Center Opens in May

Headquarters for the University Graduate School have been moved to a new campus location which contains four times as much space as the offices occupied by the Graduate School for the past several years.

The Graduate School offices, formerly housed in two different buildings, now occupy a newly renovated area on the first floor of Chapman Hall.

The new quarters contain 4,000 square feet of floor space, compared to the 1,000 square feet included in the former offices in Johnson and Susan Campbell Halls.

The old home of the Co-op store has been remodeled to include six private offices, a large central reception room, a conference room and space for a Graduate Student Center for the 3,100 graduate students on campus.

The center space will be used for a study room, a seminar room for student inter-disciplinary discussions or for lectures on a small scale. Other plans for its use are still being reviewed.

Furnishings for the center are expected to arrive the first of May.

Other space on the ground floor and old mezzanine area of Chapman Hall is now occupied by part of the staff of the Oregon State System of Higher Education.

Official dedication ceremonies in May for the new graduate center will feature Allan Cartter, chancellor and vice-president of New York University, as the principal speaker.

Architect for the Chapman Hall remodeling was Richard Clark of Eugene. The construction was done by Lee-Built Construction Company of Springfield.
