

School Accredits Job Corps Plan

The University School of Education is offering a program for credit at the Tongue Point Job Corps Center in Astoria.

Called the Tongue Point Exchange Program, this Operation Citizenship venture offers students a chance to become acquainted with Job Corps and Tongue Point women on a one-to-one basis.

Tongue Point is operated by the University under a contract with the Office of Economic Opportunity. Oldest Job Corps center in the nation in terms of continuous operation, the center was changed from a men's to a women's facility in 1967.

It is anticipated that the students in the Tongue Point program will work closely with the corpswomen's student government organization in planning joint programs.

All programs will be planned jointly between University and center participants. It is anticipated that the corpswomen will make visitations to the campus from time to time and that students will visit Tongue Point for special functions.

In order to make more students aware of Tongue Point and the exchange program, a table will be set up on the EMU terrace Wednesday.

Information about the center will be available and interested students may sign up to participate in the exchange program.

WINTER ENGAGEMENT

While the spring of the year is the time-honored period of love and engagements, the winter months are a close rival for the announcement of betrothals. One reason might be the emphasis on social galas and holiday parties. In our own community, many of our loveliest young ladies will soon be showing their diamond engagement rings to friends and relatives.

Since the engagement diamond draws attention to the hand, it should be selected with the size and shape of the wearer's hand in mind. For example, a small ring tends to over emphasize the larger hand. If a fairly large ring is desired by the girl with a dainty hand, a dome-shaped ring, or one with the stone set high, may be most becoming.

An oblong ring looks very attractive on a hand with short fingers. A setting which runs across the finger will cut the length of a long, narrow hand. A very popular cut of diamond for shorter or thicker fingers is the marquise, named after an elegant woman, Marquise de Montespan, who was the mistress of Louis XIV. She ordered the crown jeweler to cut her ring diamonds with a point at each end like a boat. This cut became popular since it gives the hands a graceful, tapered appearance. If you are diamond ring shopping, let us show you the various diamond cuts and give you our suggestions on the right style for you.
