In Student Court

Two Members Resign; Beal Attends Meetings

By JOHN JUNKINS
Of the Emerald

Two members of Student Court recently resigned. One resigned because of dissatisfaction with Student Conduct Committee decisions.

At the same time Philip Beal, associate dean of students, has begun attending Conduct Committee meetings since he stopped attending early February.

Ted Matthes, faculty member of the court who sent his letter of resignation to University President Arthur S. Fleming in early May, said the committee and the court apparently do not have the same philosophy, since all court decisions appealed to the committee have been overruled.

He said this was possibly because not all members of the court have a legal background.

"The court is unable to follow the wishes of the committee," he said. He indicated there was either a need for more lawyers on the court or a different criteria to judge cases.

Matthes also objected to the way academic offenses are handled by the court systems.

"The Student Conduct Code is ineffective in academic interests," he said.

He said that he told Fleming in his letter of resignation he had respect for judgment of student members of the court and felt the faculty should participate in court decisions only in academic offenses.

The other member of the court to resign is Jim Farrell, a law student who was court chairman. He explained it is traditional for the law student on the court to resign in the middle of spring term because of the convenience for the student. It also allows the new chairman to "break-in," he said. Wade Gano is the new chairman.

Beal said he has returned to the Conduct Committee "at the specific and personal request of the new chairman," Scott Nobles, professor of speech. Nobles began his chairmanship Wednesday, May 1.

Don Van Rossen, swimming coach, was former chairman.

Beal said he had not been attending the meetings because of his "concern with the position taken by the committee relative to my role as associate dean."

Issues he raised relative to his role with the committee included the supervisory authority of the committee over staff relationships within his office, policies for working with tense situations and demands upon his office and the committee.

He said, "As a result of what happened, I felt I could not work with the committee short of steps being taken to change the situation."

He said with the appointment of a new chairman there was "some hope improvements can be made" in his relations with the committee. "This provides an opportunity for moving ahead in a cooperative manner," he said.

While he did not attend the meetings, he said he had continued to handle all other of his committee functions, such as compiling minutes and agenda for the meetings and administering the court.

He said he also attends Student Court hearings, which he did not do prior to the misunderstanding with the committee in early February.
